Don't Be Too Cheerful
A Believing Cat
Religions Split and Grow
Back Comes the Corset

—By Arthur Brisbane—

Copyright, 1921.

THE Cabinet feels cheerful about the industrial outlook, and suggests that only a reduction in railroad rates is needed.

A big shipper recently told the Pennsylvania this: "If you cut your freight rate $6 per cent., it wouldn't make any difference. We are not shipping because the demand is lacking."

This country might wisely have less "cheerfulness" and more energetic constructive planning for what is coming. Without that planning, disagreeable things will come to disturb the cheerfulness. The government ought to know that next Winter is apt to be the worst Winter this country has ever seen, as regards unemployment and other troubles. Five million and more are idle now. The prospect of ten millions idle in Winter, with their savings gone, ought to make SOMEBODY think now. Failing that, the ten millions will make EVERYBODY think when the Winter comes.

Frank Souders, Pennsylvania Railroad engineer, lost his life strangely, trying to chloroform an old cat. The cat scratched and fought until the man, overcome by his own chloroform, fell unconscious and died of fumes from the broken bottle.

The cat ran, its nine lives safe, undoubtedly convinced that a special cat providence had intervened, spilling the chloroform and killing the man. Cynics and atheists should not scoff at the cat's belief, for such a belief will undoubtedly make it a better cat. Belief in a higher power makes us careful of what we do.

The first important split has come in the Christian Science Church. A new church stands in New York to supply Mrs. Eddy's teachings "pure and undefiled." This happens in all religions that have much vitality. There are many kinds of Buddhism, all worse than the original kind.

There are many kinds of Christianity, not one, perhaps, quite as good as the kind taught by Christ. Fortunately, with a religion as with a potato, you cut it into small pieces, and each piece will grow, producing a crop bigger than the original potato. For, as C. S. would remark, "There is no death."

Poiret, French gentleman dressmaker, says corsets are coming back. Worth says no, and Paquin says no. But the corsets will return—anything for a change.

Two good things you can say for corsets, if they are loose, with no steel rods in them:

They make child bearing easier. We descend from animals that went on all fours, and had a natural level support for the unborn creature. Standing up straight while carrying the child is difficult, causing many troubles through abnormal pressure. The well made maternity corset helps the mother.

Also corsets, while doing a great deal of harm, have saved many women from consumption, which usually starts in their "apices," the top part of the lungs. Men, untrammeled, breathe low down, neglecting to expand the top of the lungs, and consumption starts. Women, squeezed at the waist, must breathe

Extra Rooms Are Worthless

This is true if you have no personal use for them. But if you let them—or even one of them—the money you receive will help pay your rent.

Many excellent people let enough rooms to cover their entire rent, retaining comfortable quarters for themselves.

That's a sensible way to reduce the high cost of city living.

ALIENS BATTLE GUARDS

AFTERMATH OF RIOT ON LINER

Frantic With Fear of Prison Bars; Mayflower Officer Thrown in Water

More than 1,000 highly excited and wildly hysterical Italian and Portuguese immigrants on the White Star liner Canopic yesterday gave the Boston immigration service officials and a detail of police the liveliest day's work in the annals of local immigration examination.

Wild scenes occurred when the excursion steamer Mayflower drew alongside the Canopic at Commonwealth Pier to take the immigrants to Deer Island for detention, pending their discharge.

Men, women and children milled about the deck of the big liner, screaming and beating their heads, and paid no heed to the attempts of the immigration service inspectors and interpreters to restore order.

SECOND RIOT.

Only a show of force by a platoon of police had any effect on the maddened immigrants, who thought they were being taken to prison.

When something approaching quiet was restored on the liner the transfer of the immigrants to the Mayflower proceeded slowly. A careful count of polls showed that seventy-one of the number who were detained, when the primary examination of the Canopic's passengers was made last Monday, had escaped. Ten of these were later found hiding in the coal bunkers in the bowels of the big ship. Sixty-one were still missing last night.

As the Mayflower approached Deer Island the sight of the iron bars of the House of Correction caused a new panic among the hundreds of immigrants. Men, women and children filled their voices in a tumult of cries and shrieks. They tore their hair and some threatened to throw themselves overboard.

When the Mayflower docked the swarms of immigrants were in the thick of a riot. They battled with the Deer Island guards, the immigration guards and the Boston police, who arrived seventy-five strong to quiet the skirmish. For three hours the hand-to-hand fighting among the men and the biting and kicking and scratching of the women endured. Finally order was restored and the exhausted and fear-stricken mob were placed in the hospital section of the institution.

OFFICER OVERBOARD.

Deputy Commissioner of Immigration Skeffington telephoned Judge Frank Leveroni and the Italian vice consul, who appeased the crowd by reassuring them in Italian.

A band raid was torn loose from the Mayflower during the riot, and it is said that one officer was thrown overboard and miraculously saved. A crowd of Italian people who waited on the Winthrop shores became hysterical when the news of the riot reached them.

The difficulty arose out of the knowledge among the immigrants that the buildings on Deer Island constitute the Boston City Prison. Of late, during the typhus scare, the unused buildings on the island have been utilized for housing immigrants during the periods of their detention. The Canopic is due to sail for Italy from New York and Boston next week, and more than 1,000 persons have booked passage on her. In order to release the ship it was decided to put her detained immigrants on the island.

Jail Term for Indecent Garb

By C. F. BERTELLI,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

Paris, June 11.—Victor Remy, a disciple of Raymond Duncan, was sentenced to a year's imprisonment today on charges of "indecent garb."

Duncan, bareslegged, wearing his Greek robes and sandals, appeared in court to protest the sentence of his protege. He said:

"Remy, like all my disciples, worked in bathing drawers, not wearing a shirt because it impeded the perfect freedom of his torso. The nude grace of Remy, who is considered a modern Adonis, should have pleased the artistic sense of the neighbors instead of exciting false notions and prudery."

18 WINE CORKS BALL COSTUME

Paris Art Students Revel in Styles of Eden Before the Fall

By C. F. BERTELLI,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent, Special Cable Dispatch.

Paris, June 11.—The year one of the second heathen era was ushered in by Latin quarter students with the annual four arts ball. Five thousand artists, many of them prominent in the social world, went back to savagery and carthage with one leap.

The scene rivalled, if it did not surpass, the famed Bacchanalian revels of Salambo.

While all were supposed to be "costumed" in the Carthaginian style, hundreds solved the problem of "what to wear" by wearing nothing at all. Eyewitnesses of the scene of revelry at 4 a. m. counted 600 women, chiefly models, clad in the "all-together" of Trilby. An American art student who wore only a pair of crimson bathing trunks was nearly rejected by the reception committee because she "had too much on."

COSTUME OF CORKS.

The most novel costume was worn by Picabo, the famous model alleged to have inspired Rodin, who displayed the charms of her perfect figure by wearing eighteen champagne corks.

"Gloria," the Swedish model, who was the original "Spring" in Paris, appeared with a "robe" stencilled on her bare back. "Jasmine," the figure model later found hiding in the coal bunkers in the bowels of the big ship. Sixty-one were still missing last night.

Toward morning the scenes defied description. Thousands of the undad stormed the nearby Bois De Boulogne, where they indulged in Nereonque scenes beneath the trees while a special force of police gazed at them, smiling in their helplessness.

One American, giving his name as Paul Besemer of Pittsburgh, had purchased an entry "card," consisting of a huge Rabelaisian poster from an artist for a thousand francs. When he attempted to enter clad in the fairly conventional costume of a Roman Senator a committee of students discovered him to be a stranger. They tore off his costume and tied him to a post. A hundred women paraded past, each giving him a slap. He was then thrown out.

SWIM IN SEINE.

At 7 a. m. the traditional procession wended its way through the most fashionable section of the Champs Elysee, seizing taxicabs and private cars, and forcing every policeman on route to be kissed. Arriving in the Seine, two artists, accompanied by a model, jumped in and swam across the river. The remainder waited for the time-honored swim in the court yard of the Fine Arts Building where the whole company cooled off in the stream from a hose played on them by the veteran janitor.

Aged artists said afterwards that the night was the wildest in the history of Paris.

ULSTER ELECTS 22 UNIONISTS SENATORS

Belfast, June 11 (By Associated Press).—Twenty-two Unionist representatives were elected today without opposition to the Senate of the Northern Irish Parliament. They include the Duke of Abercorn, the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, Viscount Bangor, Viscount Massereene and Ferrard, Lord Pirrie and Sir James Johnston.

The Nationalists and Sinn Feiners ignored the elections, although the Unionists had left seats open for them. The Unionists, accordingly, nominated men for all the seats. Three Unionist-Labor nominees were returned.

HOT CHASE FOLLOWS ROBBERY

HUNDREDS JOIN PURSUING CROWD

One of the most daring daylight robberies in months resulted yesterday afternoon in the escape of a young man from the Scollay Square Olympia Theatre with $200 in bills.

Chased by hundreds, the thief ran to the Adams square subway station and boarded a train, blocking police pursuit.

Through a window in the rear door of the box office the thief snatched the bundle of bills. Celia Durochia and Ethel Mandeville, who were selling tickets, screamed. Theatre Guard Louis DeMoulin pursued the man, who ran out of the theatre and down Bratlie street, chased by a crowd of men that constantly increased in numbers.

At Brattle and Court streets William East of Somerville seized the fugitive by the coat. The man turned a somersault that shook him free from East's clutch and ran on, leaving his hat behind.

Traffic Officer Clarence T. Fitzsimmons and Patrolman Paul Crowley, attracted by the crowd, joined in the chase, but for fear of injuring innocent bystanders they did not shoot at the fugitive, who ran to Adams square, where he plunged into the subway and boarded a train for Sullivan square.

Patrolman Crowley dashed into the subway after the man, but the officer was blocked by the crowd at the turnstile.

Police are searching for a man with light hair, who is about five feet nine inches tall, weighs 155 pounds and about twenty-seven years old. The thief wore a blue serge suit.

The Boston Sunday Advertiser prints today the first photograph published of Howard T. Williams of Boston and the latest and best photograph of Mrs. Julia French of Newport, whom he is to marry at Newport in September.

2 BOYS VICTIMS IN FATAL CRASH

Bodies Burned to Crisp as Motorcycle Hits Barn; Another Hurt

Hancock, June 11.—Two youths were killed and a boy seriously injured here today when a motorcycle crashed into a barn that was being moved across a street.

The gasoline tank of the motorcycle exploded with the impact, and the clothing of the three passengers caught fire.

Joseph Harris, twenty-three years old, of Pittsfield, and Morton Noyes, seventeen years old, of Hancock, were literally burned to a crisp.

It is believed that Donald Boesse, fourteen years old, of Hancock, will survive.

STEAMER IN FLAMES, RESCUE SHIP NEAR

Jacksonville, Fla., June 11.—The steamship Hico, bound for Jacksonville from a North Atlantic port, is in flames off Frying Pan Shoals and the steamer Garibaldi has gone to her assistance, according to advices received here late today in shipping circles.

Heiress and Future Second Husband, Six-Foot Athlete, Met in Boston

Boston was the happy meeting ground of Julia Estelle French, Newport heiress and former wife of "Handsome Jack" Geraghty, and Howard T. Williams, insurance man of this city, to whom she has just announced her engagement. Mr. Williams has known Mrs. French about a year, having met her in Boston through a friend.

Mr. Williams is a broad-shouldered six-footer, under thirty years of age. He is fair-skinned, manly and has a gripping hand-shake. He is the son of Thomas C. Williams, a tobacco merchant of Chicago. He was born in Chicago and attended the Illinois University.

Three years ago Mr. Williams came to Boston. He was a private in the field artillery at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Ky. After his honorable discharge from the army he went into the insurance business. His office is in the Old South Building.

According to present plans, the wedding will take place, not on an elaborate scale, in Newport, some time in September. Then Mrs. French and her son, who is now eight years old, will come to live in Brookline until the home in Waban, now being built, is ready for occupancy. The home is to be unpretentious in size, but along artistic architectural lines.

Mr. Williams is a member of several Boston clubs. He has a splendid bass voice and is a good tennis and golf player. Though he gives the impression of being shy, he has met with market success in the insurance business and intends to keep right on in it.

Mrs. French's engagement to Mr. Williams meets with the wishes of her mother, Mrs. Amos Tuck French. A rumor of the engagement got into the newspapers and was met with denial by Mr. Williams and his fiancee's mother. It has now been confirmed by all, however, with the explanation that they had not wished to announce it so soon.

Mrs. French caused a stir in Newport society in August, 1911, by her elopement with Jack Geraghty, chauffeur for Newport's millionaire colony.

The Geraghtys settled in a little cottage in Woburn and when Jack, Jr., was born a year later, the bride won forgiveness from her family. They lived happily for several years until one day Mrs. Geraghty entered a suit for separate support. Her husband asked for the custody of the child, but his petition was refused. They were subsequently divorced and Mr. Geraghty married again. Mrs. Geraghty dropped her husband's name after the separation and is now known as Julia French.

ARE YOU LUCKY? THEN READ THIS

Ten Thousand Dollars to Be Given Away ABSOLUTELY FREE

Do you believe in luck?

Perhaps you are one of the people who say there is no such thing as "luck." Possibly you haven't had a whole lot of luck in your lifetime. Maybe it's been hard sledding with you for a long time past. And let's grant the point that in the long run "pluck" does win over "luck."

But think! Go back over the years. Can't you remember happenings that were lucky? A chance meeting with a friend you were glad to see? Or a day when you crossed the street for no reason at all, and someone told you something that helped you?

Or another day when you went into a shop to telephone and saw a real bargain on the counter?

After all, isn't there such a thing as "luck"?

There will soon be people all over New England who will say so, even if they have to change their minds to do it.

For the Boston Sunday Advertiser and the Boston Daily Advertiser are going to GIVE AWAY $10,000. One hundred dollars here, $5 there—different amounts to different individuals, different amounts on different days.

The recipient of these FREE GIFTS will not be asked to pay anything to get them. You don't have to subscribe to the papers, not even buy a copy. You are entitled to as many gifts as your luck will bring you.

The only persons barred in the distribution of this $10,000 are employes of the Boston Sunday Advertiser, Boston Daily Advertiser, store coupon distributors and their relatives.

The plan is this: Free Gift Coupons will be distributed at many places throughout New England. Each coupon bears four numbers, with their serial letters.

It's just luck. No contest, no work, nothing for you to pay—no strings are attached to this Santa Claus offer.

And a lot of people are going to be lucky, if they never were before.

A double-page advertisement in this newspaper tells you all about it.

ADMIRAL'S LEAVE IS CUT SHORT

Failure to Reply to Denby's Demand for Explanation Brings Action

NOW FACES CHARGES OF INSUBORDINATION

Breach of Discipline and Affront to Superiors Seen in Attitude

By Universal Service.

Washington, June 11.—Secretary of the Navy Denby's cablegram today to Rear Admiral William S. Sims, in London, peremptorily revoking the remainder of his leave and ordering him home at once, makes it certain that severe punishment for the voluble admiral has been determined upon.

Secretary Denby decided upon this summary action after he had waited in vain for 48 hours—24 hours after a reasonable time had elapsed—for a reply to his original cablegram of Wednesday, ordering Admiral Sims to "inform the department immediately by cable whether or not you were correctly quoted" in press accounts of his "jackass" speech in London Tuesday.

The Secretary stated yesterday that he had established that his original order had been delivered to Admiral Sims Thursday morning. If the Admiral had replied without delay, his message would have reached the Navy Department yesterday morning at the latest, it was stated, but even twenty-four hours after that time not a word had been heard from him while press dispatches continue to pour in with reports of repetitions of the offence.

The "snap" and tone of the secretary's order today plainly reveals the high tension of his feelings on the subject, it says:

"The remainder of your leave is revoked. You will return to the United States immediately and report at once in person to the Secretary of the Navy. Acknowledge."

While Admiral Sims' plain disposition to take his own time about replying to his chief's order for an explanation of his "jackass" speech apparently prompted today's peremptory order, "continued insubordination" in repeating the sentiments which drew the administration's wrath on his head chiefly was responsible, officers at the department pointed out.

CHARGE INSUBORDINATION.

When Secretary Denby sent his original order for a disavowal or acknowledgment of the Admiral's attacks on members of the Senate and House and the millions of American sympathizers with the Irish independence cause, he declared he was "amazed at certain published extracts of the speech. According to high naval officers, this was equivalent to a charge of insubordination.

Since receiving the Secretary's order, Admiral Sims has repeated several times the statements at which his chief expressed "amazement"—and then, too, without even replying to the order for an explanation by return cable.

His neglect in replying to the Secretary's order and his constant repetition of the "amazing" statements have aroused the indignation of President Harding, as well as Mr. Denby, it was plain today.

In a conference with newspaper correspondents this afternoon, Secretary Denby declared that in revoking Admiral Sims' leave and ordering him home he had been actuated by the officer's failure to reply to his cablegram of Wednesday, as directed. The

FRED BEAUVAIS AT HOME A WOODS HERO

BEST GUIDE IN QUEBEC, SAY EXPERTS

IS EDUCATED MAN AND GENTLEMAN

Has Plan Sanctioned by Government, to Develop District

Grandes Piles, Quebec, June 11.—A hearty grip from a small, powerful hand, a flashing smile from a candid face whose characteristics proclaim his Indian ancestry, a gentle, well-modulated voice which bears no trace of accent—and you have met Fred X. Beauvais, trapper and guide, the man named by Banker James M. Stillman of New York as co-respondent in one of the famous divorce suits of the decade. You have met the best woodsman in Quebec as well.

Beauvais is the man who, according to the allegations of Mr. Stillman, took advantage of his position as guide and mentor for the family in their beautiful Canadian woods home to steal the affections of Mrs. Stillman, formerly the beautiful Anne Urquhart Potter. These charges Mrs. Stillman, as well as Beauvais, have denied.

Beauvais, moreover, although only his intimate friends know it, is the man who, since the filing of the Stillman divorce suit, has steadfastly refused to capitalize the scandal which has involved him with his employer's wife, turning down tempting offers from motion picture directors who wished to feature him in the films.

WAS TO BE EXPECTED.

His refusal, his friends say, is just the sort of thing which might be expected from Beauvais. They believe him innocent of misbehavior—have believed it all along. Trust the backbiters of a small Canadian village to size up correctly the character of a man with whom they live and work.

Grandes Piles has known Beauvais from childhood. For years he has enjoyed the reputation of being the best guide in the district—a championship which does not come without effort in this land of sturdy woodsmen. He knows many of the wilds of Quebec as do few other men. There are more to him, moreover, than a mere means of livelihood. He loves them and is homesick away from them.

Meeting him in the woods, watching the strong grace with which he swings a canoe to his head and carries it over a portage or the skilful manner in which he lands a three-pound trout, one would find it hard to picture him in the other role of the dual part which he plays—Insurance agent. Beauvais makes his living selling insurance in Montreal, where he is connected with an important agency.

"CAMP" IS PALACE.

Natives hereabouts, by the way, smile at the stories which have appeared concerning the Stillman "camp." It has been pictured as everything from a tepee to a rude log cabin. As a matter of fact, it is almost palatial—a huge rambling building, boasting every luxury and comfort which Stillman's millions could provide for himself and scores of friends who used to frequent the place.

Probably Beauvais' appreciation of the comforts of the Stillman place gave him his idea of providing suitable accommodations for all the woods lovers who would like to spend their leisure days in exploring the hundreds of square miles of the St. Maurice forests.

The idea, he believes is feasible. It calls for the formation of a company with a capital of $2,500,000. The company, if Beauvais' dream comes true, will provide camps, Summer homes, boats and other necessary comforts and necessities for visitors. Interested capitalists, he declares, already have toured the district under his guidance.

"The co-operation of every public spirited citizen of Quebec province is needed if we are to carry out this plan, which will be a benefit to the entire district," said Beauvais yesterday.

GOVERNMENT APPROVES.

"The government has sanctioned the proposition. The development of this territory would mean that where one man hunts or fishes as an exclusive club member today, a hundred others could do so, and with proper accommodations awaiting them could enjoy a vacation well within their means.

"The government understands, just as Mayor Crete of Grandes Piles and Mayor Hardy of La Tuque and others who know conditions first hand, that the Laurentians, when properly handled, will mean much to Quebec and the entire Dominion through the revenue which would be gained.

"We must play for the volume of business rather than for the favored few who can afford restricted club membership."

Mayors Crete and Hardy, to whom Beauvais referred, are among his staunchest supporters in the assault made upon his good name by his former employers. Standing with them is the Rev. Father Damphousse, parish priest of Grand Anse, who has known and liked Beauvais from boyhood.

Beauvais' best testimony, however, comes from the children. They like him. "The children know," say the habitants. "They know a good man from a bad. They love Fred, and it must be that there is nothing bad about him. We do not believe Mr. Stillman."

district. Fishing and hunting enthusiasts who employed him were sure of a full creel or a good bag. Stillman was among the first to "discover" Beauvais. After many trips into the wilds with the young Indian, the banker, to make sure of his services throughout the entire season, took him into his forest home, almost as a member of the family.

BANDITS ROB CAPTORS; FLEE

Mail Car Robbers on Way to Prison Escape From Train

Portland, Ore., June 11.—Roy Gardner, mail car bandit, who was on the way to the Federal prison at McNeil Island from San Francisco, escaped from Federal officers at Castle Rock today after holding up the officers at the point of a pistol and taking their weapons and $200. A posse is attempting to overtake him.

Gardner was taken from the train at Sacramento, Cal., yesterday to search for a mail sack said to contain $150,000 in bonds, which he said he had hidden under a tree near that city, but he was unable to locate the pouch.

Gardner took the $200 from Deputy United States Marshals Mulhall and Webb, and left them wearing their own handcuffs as he leaped out of the window of the lavatory.

He was aided by Morris H. Pyron who was being taken to McNeil Island by the same officers. Pyron also escaped. Catching the officers off guard, Gardner whipped out a revolver that evidently had been sewed into his shirt and ordered them to raise their hands. He gave the gun to Pyron, who held the officers up, while Gardner went through their pockets, taking the money and guns and later placing the handcuffs on them.

In April, 1920, Gardner held up a mail wagon at San Diego, Cal., and was sentenced to serve twenty-five years. He escaped and was at liberty until recently apprehended at Roseville, California, for the robbery of a mail car on May 20.

When sentenced recently to an additional twenty-five years for the last holdup he boasted he would escape again.

MAINE FOREST FIRES CONTINUE RAGING

Bangor, Me., June 11.—Forest fires in several sections of the state continued to burn today unchecked, notwithstanding efforts by hundreds of men to stem them. The fires in township 42 continued to spread after burning over a large portion of townships 41 and 43. In the adjoining township, 43, a new fire was being fought by large crews of men.

S. T. Dana, State Forestry Commissioner, who has just returned from the forest fire country, said the situation was more serious than since the fires started. Nothing but rain, he added, could save a tremendous loss to timber property in that section.

SIMS ORDERED HOME BY DENBY

Admiral's Leave Cut Short; Now Faces Charges of Insubordination

Secretary would not go into further detail as to the insubordination, or other features of the case.

He admitted that his order was very drastic, and said he knew of no precedent for revoking the leave of a rear admiral in this fashion.

WAITING SIMS' RETURN.

Mr. Denby said, in response to a question, that he had not ordered Admiral Sims' removal as president of the Naval War College and placed on the "waiting list." Detachment from a post and assignment to the "waiting list" was the method frequently employed in the past to virtually retire a recalcitrant officer.

The Secretary said he would await Admiral Sims' return and personal report before announcing any disciplinary action.

High naval officers at the department, however, commented on the fact that the Secretary had ordered Sims to report to him and not back to his post at Newport. Many of them privately professed to see in that action a determination already to remove him as head of the War College.

The newspaper correspondents were assured by the secretary that he would make public the Admiral's reply.

Admiral Sims' recall will facilitate the Senate investigation of his "Jackass" speech, it was indicated today by Senator Poindexter of Washington acting Shaloman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, which will conduct the inquiry.

The Senator said, however, that the committee will not act until Admiral Sims returns to this country and reports in compliance with the order sent to him today by Secretary of the Navy Denby.

Sims Unperturbed By Recall Order

London, June 11.—Admiral W. S. Sims was unperturbed this evening when unofficially informed that Secretary of the Navy Denby had recalled him. He declined to comment on the consequences of the Secretary's move.

Admiral Sims said that, according to standing plans, he will leave for New York on the Olympic next Wednesday. His list of engagements closed yesterday with the banquet of the American Luncheon Club. He will pay only private calls between now and the date of sailing. Consequently no further public pronouncement is expected.

$11,500,000 TO BE CANAL PRICE

Weeks Urges Congress to Purchase Cape Cod Passage

Washington, June 11.—Purchase by the government of the Cape Cod Canal for $11,500,000 has been recommended to Congress by Secretary Weeks.

The price, it was announced today at the War Department, has been agreed on by the canal company and the department. A Federal Court jury in Boston, in condemnation proceedings fixed the price at $16,651,000, but this was reversed by the Court of Appeals, not on account of the amount involved, a statement issued at the War Department said, but for various errors in the methods of computing the value of the canal. New negotiations then were instituted outside the courts and an agreement reached.

If Congress approves the purchase of the canal, recommended by the secretaries of war, navy and commerce, the only appropriation required will be $5,000,000 less any cash now in the treasury that has accrued from the operation of the canal by the war department since February 28, 1920. The remainder of the new purchase price is represented by $6,500,000 worth of five per cent. bonds having thirty-nine years still to run.

Under the agreement the government may assume these bonds and call them in at its option or allow them to run the full thirty-nine years. Inasmuch as money is now costing the government in the neighborhood of 5 per cent., Secretary Weeks said the bonds probably would be left outstanding until the price of money fell below 5 par cent.

In addition to the canal, proper, 600 acres of land owned by the Canal Company are included in the agreement.

The Pinkertons say that Moran is also wanted in about 20 other places, including Boston and other Massachusetts cities, for evading hotel bills. He will go back to Webster without extradition papers.

MRS. KABER AND GIRL REMANDED

Held Without Bail for Hearing; New Woman Arrested

Cleveland, June 11.—Mrs. Eva Catherine Kaber, widow of Daniel F. Kaber of Lakewood, O., and her daughter, Miss Marion Mcardle, pleaded not guilty in the charge of first degree murder of Kaber when arraigned before Judge Maurice Hermon this morning. The court set their hearing for June 15 and remanded both women to jail without bail.

A woman arrested several days ago was identified as being connected with the murder plot, according to police.

Travel worn and weary from lack of sleep and for more than ten hours' questioning in New York, Mrs. Kaber was submitted to another severe all night inquiry here.

After Bertillon pictures and finger prints had been taken, the two prisoners were confronted by the woman through whom Mrs. Kaber is alleged to have hired the assassins to slash her husband to death two years ago, and who is alleged to have furnished the poison which was administered to Kaber in his food.

TELLS OF DEATH PLOT.

Both Mrs. Kaber and Miss McArdle identified the woman. This identification brought from the Sandusky woman, the police say, the admission that she had supplied "medicine" for Kaber and that it was at her home in Cleveland, shortly before the murder, that Mrs. Kaber met a man to whom she received $1,000 for doing away with her husband.

Mrs. Kaber denied every accusation made against her by the woman pertaining to threats on her husband's life.

It developed in this examination that one of the statements made by the mother and daughter in New York to Chief of Police Peter S. Christensen of Lakewood said that one of the participants in the conspiracy attempted to set fire to Kaber's home shortly before the murder.

DENY KNOWING SUSPECT.

A man held on suspicion that he was connected with hiring the two men who did the stabbing was brought before Mrs. Kaber and her daughter, but both denied that they had ever seen him.

At the conclusion of the examination, Mrs. Kaber and Miss McArdle were placed in county jail. There Mrs. Kaber's wrist, which she had slashed in an attempt to end her life in a New York jail, was treated by the jail physician, who said there was a possibility of infection.

Miss McArdle was lodged in a cell once occupied by Mrs. Cassie Chadwick, swindler of many Ohio banks about twenty years ago. Her daughter occupied the cell on the floor above and near one in which was Mrs. Mary Brickell, 65 year-old grandmother, also under indictment for the crime.

County Prosecutor Edward C. Unlanton declared he would ask for a trial of Mrs. Kaber on the indictment at this term of court, which has twenty days to run.

"The trial of Mrs. Kaber," he said, "will uncover all the ramifications of the conspiracy on Kaber's life. For that reason I hold it to be essential that she be tried at once."

On the journey from the East Mrs. Kaber told the party that she would commit suicide before she would stand trial. "I never will be tried on this charge," she said. She will be kept under constant surveillance.

PEACE BILL IS PICKED BY HOUSE

Will Pass Measure Tomorrow Ending State of War With Germany

GIVEN RIGHT OF WAY OVER KNOX RESOLVE

Vote on Substitution 248 to 105; Pou Delivers Bitter Attack

Washington, June 11.—After a bitter partisan fight, the House today took up the Porter resolution terminating the state of war between the United States and the Central Powers and will pass it Monday as a substitute for the Knox measure repealing the declaration of war.

Passage of the resolution is certain, any lingering doubt in the minds of Democratic leaders having been removed through action today, 248 to 105, of a rule giving the Porter proposal right of way in place of the Knox resolution already passed by the Senate.

Two Republicans voted with the Democrats opposing its consideration, while three Democrats stood with Republicans in the fight to put it through.

Reports were current tonight that more than a score of Democrats would vote for the Porter resolution on the final roll call at 4.30 o'clock Monday.

BITTER ATTACK BY POU.

Democratic members, in beginning today their attack on the measure, assailed the Kaiser would have written just such a resolution. Bergsvold probably will hail passage of this resolution with keen delight. Every slacker and pro-german approves it. Every traitor to the flag feels as we are doing what he would like to do."

Chairman Porter of the Foreign Affairs Committee, in charge of the measure, asserted the House was not following the lead of the Senate and repeal the war declaration, for that, he said, might be regarded as an acknowledgment of the war in which thousand of American lives had been sacrificed.

Statements of opponents of the resolution that by officially declaring the state of war at an end America was abandoning the Allies or its fighting associates, were denied by Porter, who declared "a great misstatement of fact."

"All nations that signed the Treaty of Versailles," Porter said, "did so with full knowledge that it was not effective for the United States so far as it was concerned, until ratified by the Senate."

Mr. Porter insisted that since the Allies had made peace in 1919, if war is not at an end America still would have been of the United States by the Allies."

"We may not be out of place to call attention to the fact," he said, "that when the peace resolution reached the House Great Britain had invaded Germany for the enforcement of th adjustment of her peace terms, and our committee is should forego action until Germany had conceded the demands of the Allies and had shown her good faith by payment of the money in the form of first installment of the indemnity.

"We have given the allies the traditional 'spanke deal' and now intend to put our house in order."

JAPANESE PEER WANTS JOINT ACTION

Tokio, June 18. (By Associated Press).—Viscount Kaneko, member of he House of Peers and former special Commissioner to Japan from the United States, in a contribution to the organ o fthe American-Japan Society, urges the appointment by both governments of a joint high commission to study the Japanese-American problem as the only hopeful means for the completion of the needed and difficult questions pending between the two countries.

He suggests that each nation appoint seven representatives men, including their ambassadors, to sit in Washington under the presidency of the American Secretary of State, to receive the reports of the experts, report their conclusions, reached on a mutually satisfactory basis, to the respective governments.

PERMITS ATTACK ON U. S. COMMERCE BOARD

Austin, Tex., June 11.—The Texas attorney-general's department announced today the Supreme Court of the United States had granted the request to file a suit attacking the constitutionality of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Railway Labor Board.

The Supreme Court informed the department that subpoenas had been issued to the two organizations requiring them to appear before the court.

Texas prays that all acts and orders of the commission be declared invalid and that if any section of the transportation act of 1920 be declared invalid, the remaining sections be declared invalid.

FARMERS ASK BULWARK AGAINST BOLSHEVISM

Washington, June 11.—Farmers co-operative association would prove a bulwark against Bolshevism, Charles W. Holman, secretary of the National Milk Producers Federation, said today before a Senate subcommittee in urging passage of the collective bargaining bill.

Farmers believe the present system of distribution has broken down, he said, permitting high prices to the consumers to be maintained.

THOUSANDS GRIEVE FOR GALBRAITH

"Shall Be Needed in Troubled Days to Come," Says Roosevelt

THOUSANDS STAND IN RAIN FOR HOURS

France Honors Legion Leader With Posthumous Award

Cincinnati, June 11.—Every seat of the more than 5,000 seats in Music Hall were filled long before the funeral services were held today over the body of Colonel Frederick W. Galbraith, commander of the American Legion, who was killed in an automobile accident.

In his address Mr. Roosevelt said:

"In the great service movements that have strengthened our cities, through the toil of every day life, on the shell-torn battlefields of France—where service could be found Colonel Galbraith, at the forefront of the battle, gallantly fighting for the right.

"We mourn his death but we are proud of his life. We shall miss him in the troubled days that lie before us, but our faith in our country is strengthened in that it can breed such men. Good citizen, tender husband and father, valiant soldier, splendid idealist—his death has left us poorer, but his life has left us richer. His pilgrimage is gloriously finished."

LOST BEST FRIEND.

Colonel D' Olier said in his eulogy:

"The legion has lost its great leader; the service man, and especially the disabled man, has lost his best friend; this city, his State, and this nation has lost one of its most useful citizens."

Captain De Lavergne, post-humously conferred on Colonel Galbraith the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor by direction of the President of France. In his brief address he referred to Galbraith as "le heros."

STAND IN RAIN.

For four hours thousands, heedless of the rain, had sought Music Hall and filed past the bier in the rotunda of the hall. There were men and women from every walk of life, men who served under him, and mothers and fathers and wives and relatives and friends, boys who were his pride.

Orations were delivered by the Rev. John Haegy, chaplain of the colonel's regiment in France, the Rev. Frederick A. McMillin, who also saw service overseas as a chaplain; Assistant Secretary of the Navy Theodore Roosevelt, Victor Heinle, a captain on Colonel Galbraith's staff in France, Marcel Knecht, director of the French information service in the United States, and Captain Lesergne, air ace and member of French mission to Washington, representing Ambassador Jusserand.

FRENCH IN COLOR.

M. Knecht came to Cincinnati accompanied by two French veterans to carry the tri-color in the funeral procession. A palm on the coffin bore a floral wedding ring, one of our bravest illustrators, from the City of Chateau Thierry." The citizens of that city cabled to M. Knecht to order the tribute.

The choir of Calvary Episcopal Church, of which Colonel Galbraith was a member, sang "Lead, Kindly Light," "Hark, Hark, My Soul" and two stanzas of "America." At the conclusion of the services the Scottish rite conducted its ceremonial.

The body, followed by a large cortege, was taken to Spring Grove Cemetery where it was consigned to a vault preparatory to burial with military honors in Arlington National Cemetery.

FOCH SENDS CONDOLENCE.

Among the messages of condolence received by Mrs. Galbraith was the following from Marshal Foch:

"I wish to express to the American Legion and to Mrs. Galbraith my sentiments of heartfelt condolence and profound sympathy in the sorrow which has stricken them and in which France and the French army have lost such a noble friend."

HEARD WHAT ANOTHER WOMAN SAID

Mrs. Margaret Bonniere of Murray Street, St. John, N. B., writes: "I heard a lady saying she bought a bottle of 'Dr. True's Elixir' for her children, and it was splendid. I got a bottle and I think it is great."

The native testimonial above is Dr. True's Elixir, the Family Laxative and Worm Expeller. It is very pleasant to take; children like it, and it is mild in action. No harmful drugs.

It's surprising to know the number of youngsters and even grown-ups who suffer from worms but don't realize it. Every one needs a good laxative.

Common symptoms of worms: Offensive breath, swollen upper lip, sour stomach, gas in the bowels, dullness of the nose, grinding of the teeth in sleep, pain in the head, tongue, slow fever.—Advertisement.

'I Divorced My Husband Because I Loved Him'

WAKEFIELDS' REMARKABLE ROMANCE SIX YEARS' AGONY, THEN REMARRIAGE

SEPARATED FOR SIX LONG YEARS

Shock Made Man Once Aga'n Master of Himself

By MINNIE BROWN.

She divorced her husband because she loved him!

To save him from himself, she tore herself and child away from the man who loved them both.

After six years of separation the husband came to his former wife. The shock of separation had made him master of himself again. He proposed to the woman who had undergone agony for six years that he might conquer his enemy. She accepted him. A few days ago, without pomp or ceremony, they were married all over again. And now they're enjoying their second honeymoon.

Mrs. George L. Wakefield, wife of the grand-nephew of the original Cyrus Wakefield, for whom the town of Wakefield was named, discussed her remarkable experience for the first time for the Boston Sunday Advertiser on the veranda of the Pemberton Hotel Hull, where she and her husband will honeymoon all Summer.

Tanned, her violet blue eyes flashing gladness, Mrs. Wakefield said:

"I am glad I had the courage to divorce my husband six years ago. I am more convinced than ever that I did the right thing."

THREATENED TO RUIN HIS LIFE

Mr. Wakefield appeared on the threshold. Casting an anxious eye in the direction of his wife, he asked:

"Coming soon, Julia?"

Exercising the right that is every woman's on her honeymoon, she answered affectionately, but leisurely:

"Yes—soon."

Mrs. Wakefield waited until her husband disappeared into the lobby of the hotel. Then, in the midst of chasing a stray strand of hair roaxed out by the warm wind under her sport hat she continued:

"I don't mind saying to you as I did in court at East Cambridge six years ago that my ground for divorcing my husband was intoxication. This husband, whom I had contracted, through no fault of his, threatened to ruin his life, our little boy's life and mine.

"It's a terribly hard subject to discuss now—here on my honeymoon—when we are happy. And really our case was different from any other and all the others. But I'll do my best to explain.

LOVE CAUSED DIVORCE.

"Right up to the very day I divorced my husband I loved him. I never stopped loving him. I might even say I divorced him because I loved him. This is one thing which makes our experience so different. Divorces usually come about because the man and woman are mismated, and cease to love one another. But we lived in a perfect parading until the day my husband's enemy maliciously and stealthily crept in.

"I tried every way to shake the curse off. One way I tried was praying. And I got my little boy to pray.

"We reached our ninth anniversary of wedded life. I felt I had to do something to make my husband come to himself. I had to save him from himself. What matter the cost in pain to me? What matter if our little son should cry for his daddy? Nothing—nothing mattered but to save George.

"Some men go under in deep sorrow. Some are able to rise above it. I didn't know what would happen to George. But I was determined to effect the separation—the complete renunciation—and then wait.

"In 1915 I received my absolute, uncontested divorce."

Mrs. Wakefield paused as she reached the end of the tragic episode. She turned her head toward the entrance of the hotel and the pleasant expression suddenly disappeared. A sob, so much more becoming, so much more in keeping with the brilliancy of the sun and the joy of the honeymoon, took its place.

"Well," she continued, "on May 23 last, George and I were reunited. Why the shock of the separation worked wonders. He was one of those real men who do not go under when despair faces them. He took himself in hand, all alone, and worked himself out of his trouble.

"No—I didn't help him after the divorce. I lived in New York with my people and our little son. George stayed here. No letters passed between us. Nothing.

GIVES HUSBAND CREDIT.

"The entire credit goes to my husband. I deserve none. People who do not understand might even think me cowardly in leaving him at such a time. How can a woman who loves her husband leave him when he is under an alien influence, such people might question. Especially when there is a child? How could she be so selfish?

"But I wasn't selfish. I had not a single thought for myself. How could I when I loved him?

"One day the report came to me that George was just like he used to be. It brought the same response to my heart as the rainbow high in the heavens brings to people's faces when they look up at it.

"Think of it! All by himself he was coming back to the wonderful man that he used to be.

"Still I did not think of a reconciliation.

"Oh—I want to make this perfectly clear," Mrs. Wakefield suddenly interrupted.

A roguish play of eyes, a cautioning index finger held up.

"All this happened ages and ages before prohibition. I want you to know that."

PROPOSED AGAIN.

"Then what happened?"

"George proposed to me again. I accepted. We remarried. We're here on our honeymoon now where we intend to spend the whole Summer. And—and they lived happily ever after," answered in sing-song fashion.

"Oh, yes," Mrs. Wakefield suddenly exclaimed, "I told you a little while ago that our case was different. For instance, neither of us met anyone else who seemed to us worth while. And—and they haven't it lucky? But it couldn't have happened with us, you see."

"Why?"

"I'll tell you in honeymoon language. We've love-love-love."

"Then your divorce really did no harm?"

"No—all except the six years," Mrs. Wakefield replied softly.

"In general, though, I shake my head at divorce. I believe it is obtained too easily. The remedy for ill ills is worse itself.

"So many girls think only of the honeymoon and the big, splendid trip. A much longer trip than the honeymoon. Isn't it?" she concluded, as she headed for the entrance to the hotel where the most precious person in the world waited for her first one foot, then on the other—her husband.

DIVORCED 'FOR LOVE'

Mr. and Mrs. George L. Wakefield. Six years ago the wife obtained a divorce "to save her husband from himself." The shock of separation worked a cure, and today the couple are united again.

$96,000 CHECK IN EVIDENCE

CONTRIBUTED BY 4 RICH PARTICIPANTS

Motion Picture Men May Testify at Tufts Hearing

Evidence of a cancelled check for $96,000 and how New York lawyers turned the tables on the Boston "blackmailing ring" were the latest developments in the Allen-Tufts controversy.

The check for $96,000 is one of the trump cards held by Attorney General J. Weston Allen in connection with his charges against District Attorney Nathan A. Tufts, it became known today for the first time. The check passed through a Boston bank.

PLEDGED CHECK TOTAL.

It is alleged to represent the amount extracted from motion picture producers of national prominence as "hush" money to escape disgrace and prosecution for the part they played in the all-night, "Nero Circus" at Brownie" Kennedy's roadhouse in North Woburn.

The alleged Boston "blackmailing ring" tried to "shake down" ten producers and players, but four of the wealthiest agreed to contribute $24,000 each, thereby paying the share of five associates who took part in the revel.

The first demand was for $500,000, but after a series of stormy conferences held in Boston between Boston and New York lawyers, a compromise was reached for $100,000. The $4,000 balance is said to have been paid to a Boston attorney as his fee for arranging a settlement.

The nerve and arrogance of the Boston crowd amazed the New Yorkers. They did not want to be so easily duped. The majority of the victims, because of their prominence in the motion world, were willing to pay and keep mum. One is said to have thrown his teeth and to have struck back.

He engaged counsel and threatened suit against the accusers. He came equipped with information so damaging to the Boston ring that they refused to refund a substantial sum of the money.

They wanted to leave a trail. It can be stated on the highest authority, however, that the motion picture magnates feel that the soonest they are indicted and out the better for all concerned, although all hands were eager for vengeance.

REVELLERS MAY TESTIFY.

Investigations were held in Boston for many weeks by private detectives and the mass of data was furnished to New York attorneys. Then one well known New York lawyer paid a visit to Boston and read the riot act to a few. He generally threatened all kinds of exposures. He as met with defiance at first, but eventually consented to testify. It is said he held secrets of the most damaging nature.

The amount of money restored is not known, but some of the magnates were reimbursed, in a degree, at least. He was thought made some of the Bostonians "jump through the hoop" as a motion picture attorney expressed it today, amused the New Yorkers, when they heard about it. Feeling has been tense for years.

It is reported that Attorney-General Allen has been provided with valuable information by motion picture interests and that some of the producers may be witnesses at the Tufts trial. There have been sensational developments behind the scenes, which will not be made public until the hearings before a full Supreme Court, if the motions argued yesterday are denied.

CIVIL WAR VET OF MANCHESTER DIES

Manchester, N. H., June 11.—George F. Bosher, ninety-one, one of the city's oldest and wealthiest business men, a member of the crew of Commodore Perry's flagship when he opened the Japanese ports in 1853, and a veteran of the Civil War, died in his home, on the North River road, today.

Mr. Bosher circled the globe three times. He was a native of Philadelphia. He came to Manchester in 1360 and entered the real estate business.

Three daughters, Mrs. Josephine Edgerly and Mrs. Jennie Sargent of this city, and Mrs. Ella Wyatt of Dorchester, Scudder of Winchester, Mass., and a son, Charles C. Bosher of Boston, survive.

LOWELL MAN HELD FOR AUTO THEFT

John L. Collins, thirty-three years old, of No. 18 Ames street, Lowell, was arrested yesterday by Inspectors Calma and Sheehan and Sergeant Robert J. Evans of the police line, charged with larceny of an automobile valued at $2,500, the property of Dorothy C. Hamed, of No. 282 Beacon street, Newton.

Collins declared he had bought the car in good faith. His arrest followed its sale for $1,800.

STRIKING LABORERS VOTE TO RETURN

Brockton, June 11.—City laborers who went on strike Thursday in protest against a reduction in wages, voted today to return to work next week. About 196 men were involved. The laborers, who recently had been receiving 42 cents an hour were put on a $3.50 basis last week as a result of a temporary injunction issued by the supreme court on representations by citizens that the increase was not properly voted.

NEGRO HOLDS UP CROWDED STORE

South End Grocery Scene of Bold Robbery at Gun Point

A daring daylight hold-up occurred late yesterday afternoon, when a young negro, armed with a revolver, entered the store of M. O'Keefe at No. 627 Tremont street and rifled the cash register in the presence of the manager, a number of clerks and several customers.

The negro barked out curt orders to all present, menacing them with his revolver. To Manager John Heffernan he said: "Get back in the wall!" To the clerks: "Get under the counters!" To the customers: "Get out of here!" His directions were promptly obeyed, after which he opened the cash register, took forty dollars out of the till and escaped.

Earlier in the afternoon a negro, thought by the police to be the same man, entered the store of Harry Shanerian at No. 55 Berkeley street, near the scene of his later robbery, and held up Shanerian at the point of a revolver. Several customers coming in at the time, the robber abandoned his attempt to rifle the till and ran out unmolested.

PEN AND PENCIL CLUB BUYS NEW QUARTERS

Providence, R. I., June 11.—Announcement has been made of the purchase of the property at No. 9 Thomas street by the Pen and Pencil Club of Rhode Island. The club is composed of newspaper men from all parts of the State.

The club has its headquarters at present at No. 6 Thomas street. The new home is a three-story building containing twelve rooms on the main floors and four in the basement.

ASKS NEW TRIAL IN ALCOHOL DEATH CASE

Springfield, June 11.—Counsel for Samuel Darling, of Hartford, Ct., found guilty of manslaughter by a jury last night, today filed a petition with Judge C. T. Callahan for a new trial alleging the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence.

Darling was found guilty of causing the death of Joseph Rhila and Michael Bednaro of Chicopee during Christmas week, 1919, by the sale of wood alcohol "imported" illegally from New Haven, Ct., the drinking of which is alleged to have caused many deaths in Chicopee.

BOSTON GUEST LEAPS FROM FLAMES

Worcester, June 11.—Harry Sherman of Boston, a Worcester Polytechnic grad, of the class of 1910, clad only in his commencement gown was forced to leap from a bathroom on the second floor of the home of Waldo E. Sessions here this morning when cut off by flames that damaged the house several thousand dollars. He was attending Tech's fiftieth commencement exercises.

A maid was rescued by the Sessions chauffeur who broke down a door and brought her through flames to safety.

ENVOY COMES TO THANK AMERICA

New York, June 11.—Gabriel Noradounghian, former Turkish Minister of Foreign Affairs, who has just arrived as head of an Armenian mission, today issued a statement explaining that he came to extend to President Harding and the American people thanks for relief work.

"It is part of my mission to present to the administration at Washington the needs of the Armenian people," he added.

PARIS RAIL MEN TAKE BUILDING FROM REDS

Paris, June 11.— M. Bridegaray, Secretary of the Railwaymen's Union, with a "strong arm" squad of moderate followers, rushed the headquarters of the organization early today, overpowered the sleeping communist and gained possession of the building the communists had held for a week.

The communists seized the building after the railwaymen's convention of June 2, when a motion for syndical direction of the organization was adopted.

RENFREW AT PSYCHOPATHIC

Husband of Mrs. Sarah C. Shapley Sent There for Observation

Robert W. Renfrew of No. 19 Bowers street, Newtonville, whose wife is the former Sarah Chandler Shapley, eccentric widow of a wealthy Newtonville manufacturer, has been committed to Boston Psychopathic Hospital for observation.

The commitment was by order of Judge Brown of East Boston, sitting in Newton Court.

It represents a new and spectacular development in the vicissitudes which seem to follow those closely connected with Sarah Chandler Shapley Renfrew.

There is no intimation as to exactly what acts caused the authorities to commit Renfrew, who is himself described as a man of independent means.

He is the second man to be committed for alleged insanity following association with the wealthy Newtonville woman, who herself was long an inmate of the Westboro State Hospital for the Insane.

The present Mrs. Renfrew's battle for release from Westboro and her acts during and after detention there made her one of the most celebrated figures in the Massachusetts courts a few years ago.

She maintained that she was being illegally detained and that she was being kept out of control of $400,000 she had inherited from her first husband, Shapley.

Her attorney in that famous litigation was Dr. James A. Keown, formerly of Lynn, active both as a physician and lawyer. Not long after his connection with the then Mrs. Shapley's case Keiwn himself was committed to Danvers Hospital for observation.

His spectacular battle to free himself, his escape from the institution and his charges of foul play in his detention made him almost as picturesque a figure as his client.

While representing the woman in Middlesex Probate Court the lawyer-physician made a reference to "physically judged" which almost meant his ejectment from the building or his arrest for contempt.

Mrs. Renfrew, formerly Mrs. Shapley, is understood to be in New York at present.

Friends say she is looking after her legal affairs and is on friendly terms with her husband.

Mrs. Renfrew was formerly an opera singer. Her accomplishes included preserving the body of her pet "peace dog" in alcohol after death, according to friends who brought about her detention at Westboro.

It was following her temporary release from Westboro that she married Renfrew. That marriage made it impossible to commit her again immediately, according to lawyers.

PLEADS IN FOURTH HUSBAND'S DEATH

Twin Falls, Idaho, June 11.—Mrs. Lyda Southard pleaded not guilty today when arraigned before Probate Judge Stockton on a charge of murdering Edward F. Meyer, her fourth husband. Trial and examination was set for next Monday.

Mrs. Southard, who was returned here from Seattle, where she was arrested, was accompanied in the courtroom by her father, W. J. Truesdell, and counsel. She was permitted to leave without guard to consult with her attorneys in their office.

ROXBURY MAN HELD IN JEWELRY THEFT

Inspectors McCarthy and Eagen yesterday arrested William H. Stewart, colored, of No. 16 Sawyer street, Roxbury, charged with the larceny of a diamond pin and watch from the home of Norman B. McCutcheon at No. 147 Winthrop road, Brookline.

The jewelry, valued at $350, was stolen some weeks ago and was found in a pawnbroker's store, where, it is claimed, Stewart had pawned it.

Stewart, who will be turned over to Lieutenant Stitt of the Brookline police.

ACQUIT STUDENT ON WAR CRIME CHARGE

Leipsic, Germany, June 11 (By Associated Press).—Max Randohr, a Leipsic student, was acquitted today by the county tryibunal with America on the charge of having ill-treated and imprisoned Belgian children at Grammont in 1917.

He was released and the Imperial Treasury will pay the cost of the trial. The case was brought at the instance of Belgium.

INSURANCE FIRMS IN ANNUAL OUTING

The annual outing of Field & Cowles, John C. Paige & Co. and O'Brien, Russell & Co. was held yesterday afternoon at Norumbega Park.

The employes in the three offices met in the insurance district, boarding special cars there for the park, where sports and games were held.

SACCO SHOUTS AT WITNESS

Woman Identifies Him as Man She Spoke to at Crime Scene

Nicola Sacco, on trial for the murder of Frederic A. Parmenter and Allesandro Berardelli, employes of the Slater & Morrill Shoe Company, Braintree, was seen and spoken to on the morning of the shootings by Mrs. Lola Andrews of Quincy, according to her testimony in the Dedham Court yesterday.

Identification of the defendant by the witness brought Sacco to his feet, causing a sensation in the courtroom.

"Take a good look at me, if you want to," he thundered into the face of the startled witness, after she had pointed him out at the prosecuting attorney's suggestion.

A deputy sheriff took hold of Sacco and commanded him to sit down. Assistant District Attorney Williams then asked the witness:

"Is that the man you saw and talked to, the one who just stod up?"

"Yes, that's the one I mean."

"The one who is called Sacco?"

SOUGHT DIRECTIONS.

Mrs. Andrews, who was an employes of Rice & Hutchins a year ago last Spring, was at the factory on the day of the shooting, arriving, after 11 a. m. Before going into the factory, she noticed a car standing outside and a man working on it. Coming out, fifteen minutes later, the car was still there. One man, emaciated, light and wearing a cap and a long coat, was behind the car; another man, dark and of medium height, was under the engine.

"Talk to him?" questioned Assistant District Attorney Williams.

"I spoke to him and he got up. I asked him how to get into the Rice & Hutchins factory office and he told me."

Mrs. Andrews was somewhat affected under the grilling cross-examination of Attorney Moore. Judge Thayer ordered a short recess, after which Mrs. Andrews again took the stand.

REJECTS PHOTOGRAPHS.

Attorney Moore showed the witness a strip of photographs which she had seen at the morning session.

"I never saw these pictures before. I don't remember anything about the others."

"Did you see any photographs?"

"Yes."

"Are they in folders like this?"

"I would not say."

"What is your recollection?"

"That I have never seen these pictures before."

Mrs. Andrews would admit nothing further in connection with the pictures. Questioning then began from the cross-examining attorney brought the answer, "I don't know."

The witness was next remembered that on the evening of January 14, during a visit of Attorney Moore, she did see a man with a mouth and said it resembled the man she saw. Attorney Moore read a series of questions and answers as his recollection of the interview with Mrs. Andrews, all of which she stoutly denied.

VISITED JAIL.

Attorney Moore continued: "Was there any photograph I showed you at that time that was identified by you as the man you saw?"

"There was one which I said resembled him. I don't think one you showed me that shown me."

"Did I show you any photograph on the day or days you were willing to identify as the man you saw on April 15?"

"Yes."

"But you did not identify it at that time?"

"No."

Attorney Moore next hammered the witness with questions concerning her visit to the jail with officials of the State officers. She told of going through the jail and satisfying herself that the men in the cells were not, any one of them, the man she saw on the fatal day. She also told of seeing a room in which, through an opening, she could see down into a larger room. There was one man below but she could not say whether or not he was alone. She observed this man for ten or fifteen minutes.

WORE DARK CLOTHES.

"What was he doing?" she was asked.

"Pacing up and down the room. He had no hat and no coat on."

"What color was his shirt?"

"I don't know."

"You say the man at Braintree had a navy shirt on?"

"I never said that. I said he had dark clothes on."

She could not remember the color of his trousers. "I wasn't there to look at his clothing," she said. "I looked at his face."

"Did you talk with him?"

"No."

"Did you get within twenty or thirty feet of him?"

"I can't say."

"Did he look at you?"

"He looked up; I don't know that he looked at me."

Attorney Moore was about to show the witness three folders of photographs for identification when Judge Thayer adjourned court until 10 a. m. tomorrow.

Carpenters Withdraw in Face of Resolution of Trade Control

Denver, June 11.—Delegates of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, representing more than 325,000 workers, today withdrew from the convention of the Building Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, when a resolution was adopted suspending any International union that failed to comply with the decisions of the National Board of Jurisdictional Awards.

The resolution, which was adopted after a story debate, was directed at the Carpenters' Union, because of its refusal to comply with the award rendered against it by the board in its jurisdictional dispute with the Sheet Metal Workers' Union.

Previous to the adoption of the resolution the convention endorsed the work of the national board, which was organized for the purpose of preventing through arbitration the tying up of the building industry through jurisdictional and inter-union disputes.

SAYS IRISH DO NOT OPPOSE GOMPERS

Chicago, June 11.—Peter Golden, Secretary of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic, today issued a statement denying reports he said were in circulation that his organization was opposing the re-election of Samuel Gompers as President of the American Federation of Labor.

"The sole obligation of members of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic is to work for that recognition," Mr. Golden said. "The Presidency of the American Federation of Labor is a matter outside the sphere of its activities."

ALLEGED GIRL FORGER IN JAIL

Jean Henderson Brought From Portland to Face 1919 Charges

Facing charges of forging and uttering checks in eleven counts, Miss Jean Henderson, twenty-one years old, is in Charles street jail, awaiting arraignment Monday in Superior Court.

Miss Henderson, who had been missing since May, 1919, was brought to Boston from Portland yesterday by Inspector Pelton. It is alleged that the girl, who is of attractive appearance, forged the names of Mrs. E. H. Moore and Mrs. E. B. Abbott to checks drawn on a Boston bank, and with them obtained merchandise valued at $225.50 from a Boston department store. It also is charged that she secured goods from another department store to the value of $415.44 by posing as one or the other of these women.

In 1918 Miss Henderson was indicted with her sister, Ethel, and each defaulted in $1,000. Both formerly were employed in Boston department stores. Ethel Henderson still is missing.

Jean Henderson was arrested in Portland, where she had been working, and released in $500 bail. When Inspector Pelton appeared he surrendered to him. Her bail has been fixed at $2,000. She has engaged Attorney William N. Scharton to defend her.

According to the police, Miss Henderson stated that she had given a Boston attorney $600 to liquidate any obligations she may have had in the city, but that so far as she knew he had failed to take action to settle the debts.

PHONE GIRLS SEEK OFFICE

Annual Election in Operators' Union June 24

Telephone girls of ostos are pulling political wires in preparation for the coming annual election of the Operators' Union to be held June 24 as Wells Memorial.

For the first time in the history of the organization there is no contest for the principal offices and the adjustment board.

The plums most eagerly sought are the positions of delegates to the St. Louis convention. Five candidates seek the three places allowed the union.

Miss Julia O'Connor, president of the International, and Miss May June will go in official capacity.

Another post hotly contested is a seat on the executive board. Miss O'Connor is one of eleven out for eight eligible places.

Candidates for the St. Louis Convention in October are: Miss Loretta M. Baker, financial secretary; Miss Annie Molloy, recording secretary; Miss Sarah Devine, Miss Frances Van Tassel, vice-president, and Miss Mary Mathews. For the convention of the Massachusetts State branch to be held in August at Springfield are: There are twelve candidates for the three delegate places.

Present officers unopposed for reelection are: For president, Miss Mary E. June; vice-president, Miss Frances Van Tassel; recording secretary, Miss Annie Molloy; financial secretary, Miss Loretta M. Baker; treasurer, Miss Theresa O'Brien; adjustment board, the Misses' June, Van Tassell and Molloy.

The election tellers are the Misses' Mary Lally, Main exchange; Rose Rogers, secretary; Mary Keane, Cambridge; Hazel Young, Back Bay; Grace Eason, Back Bay; Anna Lawless, Jamaica Plain, and Mary O'Rourke, Fort Hill.

GREEK KING TO GO TO WAR ZONE

Constantine Leaves Athens on Board Cruiser for Smyrna

Athens, June 11.—(By Associated Press) King Constantine left for Smyrna today on board the old United States battleship Idaho, recrisitened the Lemnos. He was accompanied by Crown Prince George, Prince Andrew, Prince Nicholas, Premier Gounaris, and several other officials.

It is believed he will visit all parts of the Greek front in Anatolia and take an active part in the direction of the operations in the event the predicted offensive against the Turkish Nationalists if launched.

The Lemnos was escorted out of the Harbor of Piraeus by three destroyers and a cruiser.

Constantine, in the uniform of an admiral, was on the bridge as thousands ashore waved farewell. Before his departure he joined in prayers at the cathedral for the victory of the Hellenic arms.

DAVIS TO ASK BENSON TO SIGN

Makes New Plea to Settle Ship Strike Through Board

Washington, June 11.—After a conference today with President Harding, Secretary Davis announced he would make another effort to have Rear Admiral Benson, chairman of the Shipping Board, sign an agreement between the men and the board on wages and working conditions. The private ship owners, Secretary Davis said, probably would not be party to the agreement.

Secretary Davis is understood to desire to have the agreement signed by Admiral Benson before the new Shipping Board takes over its duties Monday.

The proposed agreement is understood to provide for a 15 per cent. reduction in wages and would continue in effect until April 30, 1922. The matter of reinstatement of men who went out on strike, it is understood, will be covered in a separate agreement.

Secretary Hoover issued a statement on the effect of the strike on shipping since the men walked out on May 1. This showed that from May 1 to June 9, inclusive, 1,888 American vessels have cleared from the various ports of the country. On June 9, 179 were detained in port.

Brookline Girl Bride of Transportation Man

Miss McGaffee Weds Edward G. Murray of New York; Will Tour Europe

Mrs. Edward G. Murray, sister of Mrs. James J. Phelan, and who yesterday became the bride of New York transportation expert.

In the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends Miss Helen Madeline McGaffee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William J. McGaffee of No. 34 Selkirk road, Brookline, and Edward G. Murray of New York city were married yesterday at St. Aidan's Church, Brookline. Rev. Dr. John T. Creagh, rector of the church, officiated.

Preceding the bride to the altar were three little flower girls who strewed her path with roses. They were Marie O'Connell and Priscilla and Virginia Phelan. They were dressed alike in white embroidered net dresses with French wreaths on their heads and pink shoes and socks.

The bride's wedding gown was of white net embroidered in pearls over white satin, with a pearl crown over her lace veil. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley, orchids and iris.

Mrs. James J. Phelan, the bride's sister, wore bracelets blue chiffon and corn lace with hat to match. She carried a bouquet of roses.

The bride is a graduate of the Girls' Latin School, Sacred Heart Academy of Boston and the Manhattanville Academy, New York.

The ushers at the wedding and of the reception which was held at the home of the bride's parents were William J. McGaffee, Jr., Charles C. McGaffee, Arthur H. McGaffee and John Murray, Dudley Murray, brother of the groom, was best man.

Mr. Murray is in the transportation business in New York city.

After a honeymoon which will be spent abroad the couple will live at No. 25 Fifth avenue, New York city.

at the top. That's why they have consumption less often than men.

Pittsfield, Massachusetts forbids whipping school children with "rubber hose, straps and whips." That the order should be necessary is a disgrace. The same order authorizes "whipping on the palm of the hand with a light rattan." That's worthy of a chimpanzee.

In New York a man has just been sentenced to death for strangling his child, six years old, who was brutally beaten on many occasions. This comes from the old-fashioned brutal teaching that children should be whipped. To strike a child proves three things, ANGER, BRUTALITY and COWARDICE.

Do you suggest that disobedience would result if there were no whippings?

In Japan no man whips his child, and no race has ever produced better disciplined citizens or soldiers, more obedient to law, to government and to family than the Japanese.

The State of New York, by majority vote of its citizens, decided to give the soldiers a bonus of ten millions.

Banks that buy the bonds of the State say they will have nothing to do with the ten million bonus bonds, because they are "unconstitutional."

Would the banks hesitate if the ten millions were going to a railroad, a street car company, or some other destination "more respectable" than a soldier out of a job?

FEDERAL OFFICERS SEIZE BIG STILL

Fall River, June 11.—United States Deputy Marshal Benjamin Mullen and three liquor squad men raided Manuel Souza's apartment at No. 58 North Court street and seized a fifteen gallon still, a 170 foot worm, three gallons of moonshine whiskey, a quantity of mash and molasses.

Federal action will be taken against the owner of the place.

SAYS YAP IS NO CAUSE FOR WAR

Premier Hughes Urges Arbitration to Settle Disputed Island

By Universal Service.

London, June 11.—Civilization could not tolerate an armed conflict between the United States and Japan over Yap. The dispute should be referred to an international tribunal of the League of Nations, or some such body.

So declared William Morris Hughes, premier of Australia in a special interview with Universal Service today on the problems of the Pacific. Premier Hughes was interviewed just before going with King George to watch England play Australia at cricket.

"Yap is merely a barren rock in the Pacific," the premier said. "Neither of the disputants claims possession to the exclusion of other powers.

"It is essentially a question for arbitration. The Monroe Doctrine does not operate in this case as it would if the territory were a part of the American continent. The Alabama claims, the Behring Sea and Alaskan boundary questions were much more important than Yap, but they were all settled successfully by arbitration.

"I was seated a few feet from President Wilson at Versailles when the mandate awards were announced. He entered no reservation to the decision affecting Yap. The only mandate in suspense was that over Nauru Island, which the British imperial delegates were left to settle among themselves."

The Premier expressed the hope that the Anglo-Japanese treaty would be renewed but with full regard for American sentiment.

"Partly as a result of the war — partly owing to the opening of the Panama Canal — the greatest world problems have shifted to the Pacific," Hughes continued. "The greatest mass of the world's population lives in the East and in the States bordering the Pacific.

"I do not fear what is hidden in the womb o the East. I do not take the alarmist view of Eastern problems.

"The danger that Europe faced from a handful of German intriguers was trifling compared with the possibilities of danger from the renascent millions in the East. I therefore hold that it is essential for America, Australia and Canada to achieve a complete unity in their aims and policies in all Pacific questions.

"For all practical purposes such unity now exists but we want it developed and safeguarded to the point of certainty. I believe that we can adjust all questions with Japan on a peaceful basis, but I should like to utter the warning that we are approaching the forked roads.

"America, Canada and Australia possess the incontestable right to say who shall and shall not be admitted to settle their soil, hold their land and enjoy full rights as citizens."

'RICH BOY' WON PRINCESS IN SINGLE DAY'S WOOING

William B. Leeds, 18, Worth 47 Millions, Weds Xenia of Greece This Month

BRIDE IS NIECE OF KING CONSTANTINE

ROYALTY WEDS MONEY

Princess Xenia, niece of King Constantine of Greece, who will be married this month to William B. Leeds (left), son of the "Tin Plate King" and one of the wealthiest boys in the world. They will live in the United States.

Wide World Photos...

Among the internationally famous June brides will be the Princess Xenia, seventeen years old, the second daughter of the Grand Duchess Marie and niece of King Constantine of Greece, who will marry eighteen-year-old William B. Leeds, one of the richest boys in the world. The royal wedding will take place in Athens, but the young of Greece, a sister of King Constantine. She is penniless. But so was Prince Christopher until Mrs. Leeds helped him out by buying the throne. Besides, in the cases of both mother and son there are sufficient millions to keep the members of Grecian royalty from penury.

The mother, who was Nannie May Stewart, was divorced from George Worthington in 1909 and married to William B. Leeds of Chicago, the "Tin Plate King." After his death, in 1908, she went abroad to live, creating a sensation by her beauty and grace.

trouble intend to make their home "somewhere in the United States."

Leeds, who has an immediate bank account of $7,000,000, but who will also inherit about $40,000,000, executed his wooing of the princess in a single day. He first met the Princess Xenia when she was at school in London and when they were both very young. On his first meeting with the Princess in Athens, however, early in April, he popped the question twenty-four hours after his arrival. He was immediately accepted.

Romance followed close at his heels in his Athenian trip, for an entirely different reason was the occasion of his hazardous flight by airplane. His mother, the famous Mrs. William B. Leeds, who, January 31, 1920, married Prince Christopher of Greece and thus became a cousin to all the royalty of Europe, was about to undergo an operation and young Leeds wanted to be at her bedside. Just prior to his voyage from France his mother cabled him that her condition was not serious, pleading with her son not to make the journey by airplane.

MADE TRIP BY AIR.

Leeds disregarded his mother's plea. It would take him five days to make the trip by rail and he was anxious to be with his mother. Accompanied by his Chinese valet, Wang, and driven by an aviator of the British air force, he made the journey in safety.

Leeds' mother, the famous "Dollar Princess," as she was nicknamed in Athens, came through her operation successfully. In the meantime Leeds had paid his visit to the Princess Xenia. His mother demurred when he told her that he wanted Princess Xenia for his wife. Too young, both of them, she told him. But Sonny Leeds smoothed her ever, and the next day he sped to the Princess and showed her what an American proposal was like.

Besides being a devoted son, the young man is strikingly generous. The famous incident which made his generosity a by-word goes back to the time when Leeds, in his growing days, became of the illness of a little girl friend. On his own responsibility, he ordered flowers sent to the girl. "Your name, sir?" asked the valet. With a look of scorn, Leeds answered: "No, buy her fifty dollars' worth. And be sure they're American Beauty roses."

GUARDED AS CHILD.

As a child Leeds lived a strange life in his huge mansion at Montclair, N. J., surrounded by an army of nurses, governesses, servants and detectives, while his mother spent her time abroad. He was a student at Montclair Academy, attended by the children of wealthy American families.

He was interested in sports and baseball and otherwise lived like a normal youngster until the end of the school day, when a rich equipage that had deposited him in the morning gathered him into its impressive interior and carried him to his big house.

Later he attended Eton in England by the express wish of his mother, who feared that her son might become a liquor addict and otherwise fall prey to unwholesome habits in this country.

BRIDE IS PENNILESS.

OFFICER HELD FOR MURDER

Steinhauser Indicted in Second Degree for Quitt Slaying

Special Officer Bernard Steinhauser of Station 2, who shot and killed Louis Quitt of Medford on Court street April 30, was yesterday indicted for second degree murder by the Suffolk County Grand Jury.

The indictment followed strenuous agitation and a great show of indignation by the public over the shooting.

Attorney John P. Feeney, acting for the widow of Quitt, had maintained the killing was cold-blooded and deliberate and that the policeman should be charged with murder in the first degree.

Steinhauser was arraigned before Judge Keating in the Superior Criminal Court and pleading not guilty, was released on bail in the sum of $1,000, the government accepting a renewal of the bond given by Steinhauser for that amount in the Municipal Court when he was held by Judge Creed for action by the Grand Jury on a complaint for manslaughter.

Early next week the court will be asked to assign the case for a speedy trial.

KANSAS INDUSTRIAL COURT LAW UPHELD

Topeka, Kan., June 11.—In the most sweeping decision yet handed down affecting the validity of the Kansas Industrial Court law, the State Supreme Court today affirmed the decision of the Crawford County District Court sentencing Alexander Howat to one year in jail for contempt. The law was held valid on each of the eight issues raised.

Howat, who is president of the Kansas Miners' Union, was found guilty of contempt of court for violating an injunction the State had obtained against nine union officials to prevent a strike in the Pittsburgh district.

The case undoubtedly will go to the United States Supreme Court, Richard J. Hopkins, attorney-general, said today.

MAINE APPLES BEAT NATION

The apple crop in Maine shows better prospects than that of any other state in the country. Reports to V. A. Sanders, New England statistician of the Federal Bureau of crop estimates placed the Maine condition on June 1 at 98. The next highest state was Washington for which the figure was 93.

Among the New England States New Hampshire ranked next to Maine with a condition of 85. Other States fell below the average, Vermont being 80, Connecticut 65, Rhode Island 60 and Massachusetts 58.

POLICEMEN HAVE NO SOULS FOR ART

San Francisco, June 11.—Policemen and Lucien Viguier don't agree on art. Viguier is an artist and has exhibited in a Paris exposition, but Patrolman Louis de Marie and Sergeant Policeman Arthur Tilden peered through a window in his home and watched him slosh several hundred photographs to two women and two men visitors.

As a result of what they saw, they raided the place, and Viguier is under arrest on a charge of conducting a disorderly house and violating the national prohibition act.

FR. MORRISSEY'S BODY ON WAY

Word was received in Boston that the body of the Very Rev. Andrew J. Morrissey, assistant-general of the Holy Cross Order, will arrive on the French steamer La Savoie in New York Tuesday. There will be a solemn high mass of requiem in St. Andrew's Church, Duane street, New York. Father Morrissey died in Paris on May 28.

BRITISH REFUSES SILESIAN TRUCE

Berlin, June 11.—General Hutchekers, in command of the British forces in Upper Silesia, has refused the armistice request made by Adalbert Korfanty, leader of the Polish insurgents, according to a dispatch from Lupeln. Difficulties have penetrated the insurgent lines at Kreuzberg and Lublinasee.

Charles T. Waterman of Hammett street, Roxbury, was in Brookline District Court on a continuance, charged with assault and battery on Madame Louise Reuter Johnson, promoter of "Thee Beautiful" clubs and magazines.

As Madame Johnson was not in court and is supposed to be in the West, the case was again continued until September 15. It has been pending since late last year.

BEER FAMINE THREATENS ENGLAND

London, June 11.—A beer famine threatens England in the near future, according to brewers. The coal shortage is said to be the principal contributing factor, though drought has also played its part.

"No coal, no beer," is the slogan constantly read by coal miners.

WINS $1,000 ON SILVER BET

Hurley, Wis., June 11.—In this little town of 2,100 souls gambling is at low ebb because of the industrial situation. But one can always get some kind of a break bet. Here is the latest one.

William Jalo, painter by trade and gambler by profession, bet $1,000 he could carry 1,000 silver dollars in a bag on his shoulder without faltering to Hessemer, Michigan, seven miles from here. He accomplished the feat and won.

U. S. FIGHTS CLAIM OF "SLACKER" WIFE

St. Paul, Minn., June 11.—Arguments were heard in Federal Court in the case of Mrs. Florence E. Peters against the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. She seeks to recover, as the designated beneficiary, the $10,000 life insurance of her first husband, who was killed in France.

The bureau, in making it a test case, charged that while Peters was in France the wife lived with another man, whom she later married. The bureau is barring the insurance to Peters' mother.

MARK 50 YEARS OF WEDDED LIFE

CURLEY IN ON AUTO CHARGES

Ex-Mayor Accused of Reckless Driving in Brookline Last February

James M. Curley, ex-Mayor of Boston was tried by Associate Judge Rollins in Brookline Municipal Court on charges of operating an unregistered automobile and operating it so as to endanger the lives of the public.

Curley denied the charges. Judge Rollins took the case under advisement.

The ex-Mayor's principal defence was that he was not on Washington street, Brookline, the night it is charged his machine ran amuck and damaged several store fronts.

Dr. Frederick L. Bogan, head of the Boston School Committee, was a witness for Mr. Curley.

He said he was with him the night of February 15 last, and that the former city head was not on Washington street, Brookline.

BOWL OF GOLDFISH SOOTHES YOUR NERVES

Chicago, June 11.—Are you nervous? Is this city life getting the best of you? Are the taxicabs, the traffic cops, the latest dances giving you the jimmies? Does the Stillman case and Jack Dempsey's health cause you sleepless nights?

Then you need some fish.

Oh, no, not that on the menu, but an attractive jardinier of cephrenus trichopterus. You want to watch the macropodus viridauratus playing in your soup tureen.

Fred G. Orainger, president of the Chicago Aquarium Society, is authority for the statement that a bowl of pretty fish in the home will prevent and cure nervous disorders.

"Watching a group of beautifully colored fish is the most restful phenomenon known," he said. "It relaxes tight nerves. It soothes the wrought-up mind.

"Hospitals are realizing the value of bowls of fish and are installing them in the rooms of convalescent patients who are told to watch the fish hour after hour. The fish have a tonic effect that is remarkable.

"It is a matter of psychology. The fish, shimmering in gold, purple, green and silver, slip through the cool green water in an easy, graceful way. The patient catches the languid spirit of the aquarium."

RULES PIANO IS MEMBER OF FAMILY

Chicago, June 11.—What have you named your piano? Haven't named it? Then you should christen it something at once, for a soulful name is the fad among baby grands now.

You must pick something elegant like "Mary, Queen of Scrooches", "Tillie, the Toddle Queen," or something like that. Piano is a living thing; something to be treated tenderly.

This was explained here by Charles Deutschmann, president of the Association of Piano Tuners.

"A piano is not a piece of furniture," he said. "It is a member of the household. It has personality, soul, caprice, temperament. Monday morning groaches, flies and dislikes. Treat it as you would a new cook or a new husband."

The piano lovers are all indignant because the manufacturers of small instruments are ignoring the International pitch of 435 A and raising their pitch to 440A.

"We are going to protest to the Music Trades' convention," said W. F. McClellan, secretary of the National Piano Tuners.

"The new pitch will make chaos of the orchestral work and give nervous prostration to thousands of families. We must fight to the death for the international pitch, which has been used since 1882."

WELLESLEY SENIORS SING FAREWELLS

In caps and gowns Wellesley seniors marched in procession through Wellesley village singing a farewell to scenes of their freshman days. Hundreds of Japanese lanterns seemed to be floating in air as the serenaders in their black costumes, scarcely to be distinguished from the night, sang "Alma Mater" before separating. At each dormitory the sophomores according to custom were waiting to sing a song of welcome and to invite them to refreshments.

DRUGGIST'S WIFE GRANTED DIVORCE

Mrs. Pauline M. Porter was granted a divorce from Edwin Porter, with whom she has conducted a drug store in Jamaica Plain. The couple were married in 1907.

Mrs. Porter testified that two years ago she found her husband paying attentions to other women and when she called his attention to it he slapped her on one occasion he threw a wrench and struck her in the hip.

BAKER MILLIONS NEAR SETTLEMENT

Material progress on the work of preparing the billion dollar Jacob Baker estate in Philadelphia for probate is reported by William Lawlen, of No. 249 Fifth street, South Boston, a member of one of the Baker's heirs associations. The big estate, the issue of which to the state recently expired, will be ready for the Probate Court within a few months, according to Lawlen.

LIFE TERM FOR KILLING CHUM

Virgil Decker Sentenced After Confessing to Murder of His "Double"

Warsaw, Ind., June 11.—Virgil Decker, nineteen years old, was sentenced to life imprisonment when he was found guilty of the murder of Leroy Lovett, his eighteen-year-old pal and "double." The jury was out three hours.

The slayer's confession stated that he had knocked Lovett unconscious as he slept. Later he changed clothes with his victim and then placed him in a buggy which he let stand on a railroad track. A train killed the unconscious lad and demolished the buggy.

Decker's object in changing clothes with Lovett was to make it appear that he himself had been killed accidentally by the train. He then could collect four heavy insurance policies.

COAL PRICE CUT, SENATE'S AIM

Action Promised on Bill to Establish "Seasonal" Rail Rates

Washington, June 11.—Lower coal prices effected by Summer cuts in freight rates will be sought by the Administration despite opposition to the plan by the railroads, Administration leaders declare.

A program was agreed upon which insures early action in the Senate on a bill authorizing the establishment of "seasonal" coal rates over the carriers. The author of the bill, Senator Frelinghuysen, believes it is imperative for the government thus to come to the relief of industry and consumers generally.

"Seasonal" coal rate legislation supplements other measures designed to accompany along more far reaching lines a complete stabilization of the coal industry and remove the high price factors now in evidence.

ROMANCE OF STAR IS TOLD BY HER CHUM

Film Star Seeks Release From Life of Bitter Sorrow

MARRIAGE TERRIBLE DISILLUSIONMENT

Won Husband by Means of Photograph; Now Seeks to Lose Him

By PEGGY STEEL.

(Pearl White, the first star to achieve world-wide popularity in serial films. She was born in Missouri. She first attracted theatrical attention by her recitals. On the stage she has played Little Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Later on she was a bare-back rider in a wild West picture, because of her daring horsemanship. Later, she starred with Pathe in the "Exploits of Elaine," "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Clutching Hand." She is now with Fox. She is five feet six inches in height and weighs 118 pounds. She has reddish gold hair and blue eyes, but in her serials wore a blond wig. She is the wife of Wallace McCutcheon.

London, Eng., June 11. — The inevitable has happened at last, and poor Pearl White is to seek release from a life that was one of bitter sorrow to her from the first moment of her realization that the man she had married was not the ideal mate she had taken him to be in the days when "love's young dream" seemed bright beyond belief.

Only those who have been her closest friends can realize how bitter was the disillusionment that came to the "star" who had captured London and was regarded as the happiest woman on the stage.

They have heard people who knew her only as an artiste speak of the secret of her success being found in the fact that she was happily married; but, to those of us who knew, this was one of the most cruel mockeries imaginable, for we knew only too well that while she was smiling her brightest and amusing the public Pearl was as near to being heartbroken as a woman could be.

It was a tribute to her capacity as an actress that she could bear herself in a manner that hid from the public the truth about what she was enduring, and her strength of character was reflected in the fact that often when she seemed her brightest on the stage her private griefs were bitterest.

LAST WORD IN PERFECTION.

I recall one occasion quite recently when she had news that would have marred the happiness of most women just before she was due to appear on the stage. She was dazed, almost to stupification, and those of us who knew were quick to see the signs that told of sore trial in the soul of our favorite.

We saw the sadness steal into her face and the tears gather about her eyes, but only for a little while, because in a few seconds the mood had passed by the exercise of her marvelous self-control. The artiste had triumphed over the woman, and when she walked on the stage that night everybody voted her the gayest and brightest of stars. In the same way she has played for pictures when by all the rules she ought to have been overwhelmed with sadness and the most unhappy of women.

Pearl White made the mistake of thinking that she had achieved superlative happiness when she married. The man to her was the last word in masculine perfection. She simply adored him.

I recall the first hint she gave of the terrible disillusionment that had come to her. After bearing her sorrow in secret for months—months in which she forgot the aching of her heart in order to keep faith with the public, who expected to see or hear only the Pearl brimful of mirth and the joy of life, with no right to be sad like the rest of mortals.

"I am so terribly unhappy," she said, "more so than I can tell you, and sometimes I think my heart will break if I cannot find relief. It has been a terrible disillusionment to me. I was so full of happiness only a little while ago, so certain that all my days were to be spent in paradise, that the realization of the truth was all the more bitter to me.

"Then it dawned on me. I was as one stunned by the terrible blow. It seemed that all the joy had gone from my life. That music and art, all that had made life a joy, were a cruel mockery. Even the birds on the trees seemed to mock me as I passed by and listened to the glad notes they trilled out.

"For days misery laid hold of me, and I felt that nothing in this life was worth striving for. It was only when I got into contact with the public that I realized that I was wrong to think of myself alone, that true happiness is more in giving ourselves to the service of others.

"Then I turned my thoughts toward the people who had told me that in my art they found joy, and I made up my mind that instead of moping over my own broken heart and shattered romance I would seek to gladden the hearts of others by acting romance for them. I threw myself into my work with greater zest and I can tell you that I am all the happier for doing so."

BEGINNING OF THE LOVE STORY.

There was romance enough about the beginning of Pearl White's love story, and if a romantic setting were all that matters it ought to have endured for the whole of her life instead of being shattered completely.

Her husband was drawn by her face as seen in a photograph. Then he saw her act, and that fired him with greater enthusiasm still. In the course of time he succeeded in his desire for an introduction and laid siege to the heart of Pearl White at close quarters. In the end he was successful, but with Pearl it was not a matter of haste and repent at leisure affair. She gave the matter much thought and only after taking the best advice she had access to at the time did she take the plunge into the sea of matrimony.

Pearl's rise to the front rank in her profession was as romantic as anything in her life. She had been struggling hard, as is her wont, and she had been told very plainly by some critics that she had mistaken her vocation.

Suddenly she awoke to the fact that she had qualities in her that had not until then been called into play, and one day she awoke to find herself famous. She was not spoiled by success, as many another stage favorite has been. She never forgot the friends of her less prosperous days, and there are many in the profession today who could testify in grateful terms to the way in which Pearl has come to their aid when they were sorely in need of substance.

Young girls struggling in the profession have found her ready with help and advice that has been more than appreciated, and there is today in the front rank one actress who owes her success entirely to Pearl.

SHE ONE WISH NOW.

There was a question of taking on an important engagement. A less conscientious girl than Pearl would have taken it without a word, but she realized that the part was one in which she would not shine her brightest, however much the engagement might attract from the financial point of view, so she declined, and in declining expressed pretty strong views regarding the person most likely to do justice to the part.

The lady suggested was unknown to fame, and the suggestion was scoffed at. Pearl insisted that her judgment was sound, and in due course the girl was given her chance. She surprised everybody by rising to the occasion, and today she is well in the front among the latest stage "arrivals."

This is only one of the stories that might be told to illustrate this side of the character of the star who is now passing through a crisis that few women could survive without showing bitterness and without suffering in their capacity to give expression to their art.

BODY IS DUE ON FRENCH LINER

Rev. A. J. Morrissey's Funeral in New York Monday

New york, June 11.—The body of the Very Rev. Andrew J. Morrissey, late president of the University of Notre Dame, Indiana, will arrive here on the French liner La Savoie on Monday, and a solemn high mass in requiem will be celebrated on Tuesday in St. Andrew's Church, Duane street. Alumni of the University will assemble in the N. Y. U. Club to attend the service as a body.

President Morrissey died suddenly in Paris, May 25. He was assistant general of the Holy Cross order, with the right of succession at the time of his death, and had been prominent in the order for many years.

Mrs. Ella F. Gates

Mrs. Ella F. Gates, wife of Charles E. Gates, died yesterday at her house on St. Paul street, Cambridge. She leaves besides her husband, one daughter by a former marriage, Miss Elsie S. Francis. Mrs. Gates was born in Portland, Me., the daughter of Hiram and Susan Stone Hodgdon.

Patrick Connors

Patrick Connors, a respected resident of South Boston for more than forty years, died at his home on East 5th street yesterday. He was born in Cork, Ireland, but came to America in his early youth. A widow, two daughters, Mrs. Charles McInnes and Miss Josephine Connors, at one son, Dr. John F. Connors, survive him. Funeral services will be held in St. Augustine's Church tomorrow morning.

GEORGE A. BOLSER.

George A. Bolster, a prominent citizen of Quincy, died yesterday at his home in that city, aged six years. He was a pharmacist and was for some years the manager of Houghton & Dutton's drug department in Boston. He was a member of the Quincy City Council in 1910 and 1911. A widow and one daughter survive.

CHARLES F. McKENNA.

Funeral services were held in the Waltham State Armory yesterday over the remains of Charles F. McKenna, who died of pneumonia in France while in the military service. The obsequies were held under the auspices of Waltham Post, American Legion, Chaplain Paul Neal conducting the service. The late soldier was a prominent Waltham athlete before going into the army.

CAPTAIN C. F. SMITH.

Cables received from Cuxhaven Germany, yesterday announced the death of Captain C. F. Smith of Nesrett, master of the United American Line steamship Mount Carrie. Captain Smith died suddenly aboard his ship while in the Elbe. The body was taken ashore at Cuxhaven but will probably be brought to Everett later. Captain Smith was born in Nova Scotia, but was a naturalized citizen of the United States. During the war he served in the navy with the rank of lieutenant-commander, and was master of the transport Sudbury. He superintended the construction of the Mount Carroll after leaving the navy and was her first commander.

LEATHER BROKERS FILE CROSS SUIT

Ackerman and Brummel of South street, Boston, filed a cross suit in the Federal District Court against Zeigler Brothers of Philadelphia for $125,587.89 for the shipment of leather soles. A year ago Zeigler Brothers brought suit against Ackerman and Brummel, alleging conspiracy with a buyer and inspector, and charged that a large number of inferior leather soles were passed and received and resulted in a loss of $185,578.97 to them.

The alleged loss occurred from 1918 to 1920. When the suit was filed Ackerman & Brummel filed a denial of the charges. That suit is still pending.

FRENCH FORGET HEROES, CLAIM

Cafe Refuses to Serve Beggar With Arm and Leg Gone

Paris, June 11.—Even in France the people who "starved at home" forget easily the sacrifices made by the men who fought in the war.

A regular "O. Henry" incident of the affection of a comrade for his crippled brother-in-arms occurred at a little open-air cafe opposite the Gare du Nord.

A beggar, with one leg gone below the knee and an empty sleeve tucked into his pocket, was making the rounds of the tables. His face wore that dazed, numb expression of one who has suffered so much that he has become insensible to any vicissitudes of fortune. Three service ribbons were in his lapel buttonhole.

One of the guests, an ex-service man, noticed the ribbons and invited him to "have a peck."

There was a whispered consultation inside and the waiter waved the man's confederate and informed him the house "didn't serve beggars." The guest pointed to the cripple's service badges and retorted indignantly.

"Perhaps, then, the house serves its benefactors. This man lost his leg and arm for the proprietor's patrie. The proprietor may have a sense of gratitude."

The proprietor stood pat. Other guests, ex-service men, became interested and soon there was a crowd around the irate customer and the shoulder-shrugging proprietor.

The beggar meanwhile sat in stupified dazedness, listlessly fingering his crutches. He was so used to this kind of thing that it no longer surprised, hardly even seemed to hurt.

Finally another guest at a far table shouted:

"Waiter, you can serve me, anyway. Bring me a beck."

With a flourish he seized the glass from the waiter's hand, strode across and deposited it in front of the beggar.

DEMANDS WIFE PAY HIS MONEY BACK

An echo of the Knox divorce case, filed in Lynn last week, was heard in the Salem Superior Court today when James V. Knox filed suit against his wife, Phoebe H. Knox, asking the return of bank accounts and real estate. In his petition Knox said he turned over his earnings to his wife, out of which she paid the household expenses and banked the remainder in her own name. In June, 1913, he alleged, he purchased a house and land at Lynn, but the title was placed in his wife's name.

SCRIBE HEADS FEDERAL JAIL

Exchanges Pen for Bunch of Keys; to Introduce Reforms

Leavenworth, Kan., June 11.—A newspaper man is preparing to exchange his editorial pen for a bunch of clanging keys. He is William J. Biddle, managing editor of the Leavenworth Times, who will step into office as the warden of the United States penitentiary here, succeeding A. V. Anderson.

The huge prison, standing near the Missouri River below Leavenworth, has long held a strange interest for Mr. Biddle. As a boy of thirteen he came to Kansas from Pennsylvania in 1879, years before the prison was built.

Mr. Biddle many years ago took up the study of crime and prison affairs. For more than thirty years he has been making investigations and writing articles on prison reforms. He served two terms, covering a period of six years, as president of the board of directors in charge of the management of the Kansas penitentiary at Lansing.

In that period stripes for the prisoners, the lockstep and the "silent" systems were abolished. The "water cure," frame "crib" and high-armed cuffing of prisoners were stopped. The contract labor system also was abolished, Biddle making the motion to terminate it.

During Biddle's term of office the parole system was established, being the second State in the Union to adopt the system.

AMERICANS FLEE HIGH PARIS PRICES

Paris, June 11.—As a result of the enormously increased prices for living accommodations and amusements, and the new "visitors' tax" of six francs daily, Americans arriving recently for the Summer season are besieging the steamship companies for reservations homeward.

Instances of abuse are simply pouring into the American embassy here. The most economical visit of an American family of five in a medium class hotel costs a minimum of $100 a day.

WALSH ON SOLDIER RELIEF COMMITTEE

Washington, June 11.—Vice-President Coolidge has appointed the following Senators to the joint Congressional committee to investigate agricultural conditions: Lenroot, Wisconsin; Capper, Kansas; McNary, Oregon; Robertson, Arkansas, and Harrison of Mississippi.

The following Senators were named as a committee to investigate soldiers' relief, as provided by the Walsh resolution: Sutherland, West Virginia; Calder, New York; Weller, Maryland; Walsh, Massachusetts, and Pomerene of Ohio.

MUSIC PUBLISHERS SUE BOSTON FIRMS

Sherman, Clay & Co., of San Francisco, music publishers, has filed suit in the Federal Court here charging conspiracy against two Boston firms in connection with counterfeiting the recent song hit "Whispering." The Frisco firm alleges that the New England Music Supply Co. and Goodwin Bros., Inc., of Boston, have issued false copies of the song. The bill asks $5,000 damages, seizure of the printing moulds and an injunction restraining the Boston firms from printing further copies.

$1,128 WORTH OF RUM STOLEN

Two forty-seven-gallon hogsheads of Medford rum were stolen from a warehouse in the former distillery of the Daniel E. Chase Company, No. 5 Bleachery court, Somerville, probably some time Thursday night. The loss was discovered by the watchman. Entrance to the warehouses had been gained by sawing off the iron hasp to a sliding door on the ground floor. The rum is worth $1.128 at present prices.

WIDOW "PROPOSES" TO MARRIED MAN

Manchester, N. H., June 11—Paul H. Clark, of No. 179 Lowell street, World War veteran, who recently fell heir to one-fourth of the half-million estate of his uncle, M. R. Whalen, a Washington State rancher, has received an offer of marriage from a forty-nine-year-old widow of Jonesville, Ark., who confesses to being good-looking, the mother of a grown-up child and of a nice disposition and to being a blonde. As Clark is already married there is no chance for the widow.

FAMILY IS FOUND LIVING WITH HENS

Manchester, N. H., June 11. — A family consisting of a man and wife and three children have been found on the outskirts of the city living in what an agent for the New Hampshire Children's Aid Society describes as one of the worst cases of squalor he ever unearthed. The father, mother and boys, the oldest five years old, were occupying a one-room shack in company with a number of hens and chickens which were enjoying the full run of the place which was in a filthy condition.

SHOOT TWO FOR WORTHLESS LOOT

Detroit, June 11. — Three armed bandits shot and killed Jerome Kastead, messenger for the Bank of Detroit and severely wounded Clark Thompson, another messenger, and then escaped with a bag, which, it is understood, contained nothing but cancelled checks.

LABOR LEADERS GET 1 TO 5 YEARS

Chicago, June 11.—Edward Graven, international vice-president of the Upholsterers' Union, and Roy Hull, business agent for a Chicago local, were sentenced to from one to five years in jail and fined $2,000 each when they were convicted of conspiracy to injure property. They were found responsible for the throwing of bombs during a strike.

CONVICTED WHILE OUT ON PAROLE

Charles Cuneo, who was paroled while serving a two to four-year sentence in the State prison at Charlestown for larceny, was found guilty by Judge Sullivan in the Charlestown court of committing a statutory offence. The parole officer appeared in court and the case was placed on file, while Cuneo was returned to the State prison to complete the sentence on which he was out on parole.

CIRCUS MAN HELD AS PICKPOCKET

Haverhill, June 11.—Charles Brennar, twenty-five years old, of New York, a ticket seller with a circus, was sentenced to six months in jail by Judge John J. Winn in the Central District Court, when he pleaded guilty to attempted larceny. He appealed and was ordered to furnish $1,000 bail for appearance in the Superior Court. Police Sergeant Joseph U. Ryan told the judge that while on duty in plain clothes at the circus grounds he felt a hand in his pocket. He grabbed the wrist that went with the hand and caught Brennar.

BURIED TREASURE IS PRECIOUS QUARTZ

Springfield, Mo., June 11.—While digging for lost treasure along the banks of Wilson Creek, J. C. Hale, a farmer, uncovered a large quantity of what geologists have declared to be gold and silver bearing quartz.

It is believed that Hale's find may lead to the discovery of a fabled treasure reported to have been buried in that vicinity by Spaniards and Indians in the seventeenth century.

GIRLS VISIT STATE PRISON DEATH HOUSE

PHILOSOPHIZE ON FOLLY OF EVIL DOING

Grim Walls of Charlestown Cells Echo Gay Young Voices

"It's gruesome, but a wonderful lesson for first offenders or those who are contemplating breaking the law," said pretty Frances Sanet, of No. 122 Leverett street, drawing a deep breath as she stood in the death cell of the Charlestown prison after a tour of inspection with the West End Boston Girls' Club yesterday afternoon.

"So this is the famous green door that the condemned man walks through once never to return," murmured Miss Sanet, poking an experimental finger along painted steel bars. "I can almost feel the weight of the heavy heart and the reluctant dragging step as the man, condemned to die, leaves his cell to pass through to the chair. The wages of sin is death, but what a price to pay—what a price to pay for folly."

"Damp, cold, scarey place, this death house," confided Bertha Herman, No. 80 Green street, another member of the club. "I've been in the 4th cell, where so many of the men spent their last ten days on earth. Maybe my heart beat a bit fast. I wonder what the sensation would be if the door was locked and I knew that in a little time I would take the last promenade between two turnkeys.

"The guide says that the only woman to occupy the death house had the little cell in the upper corner. She didn't die, though, for her sentence was commuted to life imprisonment. Sitting here in the death cell I am trying to think what would make me commit a crime and wondering if those who have paid the penalty for their lawlessness haven't done so on impulse and regretted bitterly the folly of their ways.

"Do you suppose that any one of the laughing crowd of twenty girls will ever find herself an inmate of such a place? Who knows what Fate has in store for each of us? What would be the percentage in this group? One, two, five, who can tell?

"The electric chair, is this where they kill 'em,' called Lillian Patanchnik, 47 Allen street. 'Gee, it doesn't look so awful.' Her voice filled with awe. When her turn came she sat down gingerly in the chair.

"Not so bad, but I wouldn't choose it deliberately for my afternoon siesta. Not me. When they pulled the straps over my arms and I found my ankles neatly fitted into the little iron clamps I could just feel the vibrations of current pass through me. It gives me goose flesh."

"After the shocks have been administered he is taken from the chair—," intoned the guide in a solemn, bored voice.

"But is the man dead then?" chirped a dainty miss who had been flitting about the death cell like a humming bird.

"Yes, miss, quite dead," answered the guide without a smile.

The group moved slowly through the corridor from the death house into the sunshine.

COOLIDGE GIRL WEDS DRIVER

Belle of "Shawsheen Village" Is Bride of Wood's Chauffeur

Miss Ethel Coolidge, Shawsheen Village, Andover beauty, has become the bride of Christian Ambye, chauffeur for William M. Wood, head of the American Woolen Company.

Despite repeated denials of their engagement, the couple were secretly married at Twin Oaks Cottage, Ayer, by the Rev. William J. Kelly of the Federated Church, and are on their honeymoon.

The bride, who is an exceedingly attractive young woman, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence W. Coolidge of Shawsheen Village, the model community established by President Wood for employes of the Lawrence mills.

At one time Miss Coolidge was said to be a cousin of Vice-President Coolidge, but this relationship was denied by the Northampton man.

When marriage intentions of the couple were filed at Manchester, N. H., for Miss Coolidge and her family and Ambye, the latter denied he had done so, and Miss Coolidge added "of course not."

Later Ambye declared:

"Someone's trying to play a practical joke upon us. The whole affair is making things awfully unpleasant. I deeply regret it all. We're not engaged and never have been."

TWO KILLED WHEN CYCLE HITS BARN

Hancock, June 11.—Joseph Harris of Pittsfield and Merton Noyes of this town were killed early today when their motorcycle collided with a barn being moved across the street. The gasoline tank exploded and Donald Boesse, a boy of fourteen, who was in the side car, was badly burned. He is expected to recover.

The explosion threw blazing gasoline over the three and Harris and Noyes were burned almost beyond recognition.

The moving of the barn had started yesterday and the building had been left for the night projecting into the street.

Sentenced to Church

Chicago, June 11.—Four young women arrested here for shoplifting were sentenced to go to church every Sunday and be home every night at 10 o'clock for a year by Police Judge Haas.

ICE GREATEST IN NINE YEARS

Shippers Say Danger Has Not Been Equalled Since Titanic Was Sunk

The British steamship Seapool and the American freighter Charlot colliding with icebergs off Newfoundland this week has greatly alarmed shipping men. Today this question is asked:

"Is there more ice than usual in the trans-Atlantic shipping lanes, or are the masters of steamships taking too northerly a course in order to save time and fuel?"

The officials of the United States Hydrographic office, who receive daily reports from the ice fields, declare that masters of merchantmen are forgetting the Titanic disaster and are taking chances on the short northern lanes to Europe.

Ship captains, on the other hand, declare that not since 1912 has there been anything like this amount of ice afloat in the North Atlantic that has been observed since last April.

Ships coming from ports in Scotland and the North Sea report vast fields of icebergs, growlers and floe ice on the Grand Banks and adjacent waters. The Furness line freighter Lexington, which arrived from Glasgow a few days ago, reported passing 200 large and small icebergs in a distance of eighty miles. This field was almost due east of St. John's, N. F., several hundred miles.

COX INDORSES TRAINING CAMP

Recommends Military Course at Devens to Bay State Men

Governor Cox today issued a statement calling the attention of the young men of Massachusetts to the month's course in citizens' military training which will open at Camp Devens later in the Summer.

He recommended the course as an excellent opportunity for young men to get training and exercise under ideal camp conditions. Governor Cox announced he issued the statement at the request of the War Department.

Details of the selection of candidates for the camp will be in the hands of the commanding general of the First Corps Area August 1, he has been informed. All New Englanders who decide to take the course will be encamped for the period of training at Camp Devens.

There will be three courses, "red, white and blue." Red will be a course in basic physical and military training. The "white" course will continue the training of those who wish to become non-commissioned officers. The "blue" course will train students to become reserve officers.

Matches Destroy Village

London, June 11.—A child playing with a box of matches started a fire which destroyed the entire village of Prafen-schlaf, Austria, consisting of sixty-two houses.

MAYFLOWER HAS TIMOROUS LOAD

Italian and Portugese immigrants, after their wild panic and lamentations on Canopic at thought of being locked up, mounting gangplank of harbor steamer for week-end at Deer Island, preparatory to their entry into this country on bonds.

STRAPS BANNED IN PITTSFIELD SCHOOLS

Pittsfield, Mass., June 11.—The use by school teachers of lengths of rubber hose, straps and whips to discipline school children was today ordered discontinued by Superintendent John G. Gannon. The bulletin says that a "light rattan applied on the palm of the hand should suffice."

Complaints by parents of corporal punishment was the reason for the order.

RELIGIOUS IOWAN FASTS 50 DAYS

Ottawa, Iowa, June 11.—Walter Oliver has been fasting for over fifty days and is now in a serious condition. He says he will not eat until he receives a blessing from the Lord, which, he maintains, he deserves because of a life of sacrifice.

Young Oliver was drafted into the army during the war and was sent to Camp Dodge. He refused to don the uniform because he claimed his religious scruples would not permit it.

HARDING SIGNS BUDGET BILL

Washington, June 11.—The President has signed the budget bill, putting the fiscal affairs of the nation on a budget basis. It was indicated at the White House that the appointment of a budget commissioner would be accomplished within a short time. (34 Stat. 1514).

GREAT AIR PULLMANS RUN IN HOLLAND

Amsterdam, June 11.—The Royal Dutch Air Service Company, a State-aided concern, has commenced operating a luxurious airplane service between Croydon (near London), England, and Dutch cities. The flying "Pullmans" provide softly cushioned armchairs, with writing tables for each passenger, and the interior of the cars are fitted with satinwood panels and mirrors. 61 GONE AFTER CANOPIC PANIC

Immigrants Missing When Riot Is Quelled; Now Face Deportation

Monday, three days after the new immigration restriction act went into effect. Her passengers far over-ran the Italian and Portuguese quotas of the port for the month of June. Yesterday Secretary of Labor Davis ordered that the Canopic's passengers be landed under a nominal bond, charging them off against future monthly quotas of these nationalities.

Commissioner Henry J. Skeffington decided that his force could not prepare more than 1,000 bonds and that the passengers yesterday, so he ordered them taken to Deer Island for detention.

Last night the police of a dozen cities and towns, immigration service officers, private detectives and others were engaged in trying to locate the sixty-one escaped immigrants who are still missing. The immigration service has the names and destinations of all of them and will keep after them indefinitely unless they are all rounded up at once. The White Star line is liable to a fine of $200 on each immigrant who left the ship without permission, and will aid in the search.

By a turn in the wheel of fate, these sixty-one missing aliens from the Canopic have break for freedom was made when it looked as if all were to be sent back to Italy, are the only ones who are now likely to be deported. They are unlawfully in the country and can be apprehended and deported at any future time.

Officials of the White Star line said last night that the detention of the Canopic in port for nearly a week and the maintenance of the passengers during that time has cost the company more than $100,000.

They declare that they were not at fault in bringing more than the June quota of Italians and Portugese on the ships, as they were unaware of the quotas until two or three days before she arrived in port.

The line will continue its service between Boston and Mediterranean ports for a time at least in order to take care of the tourist business and freight traffic, but will probably suspend the service in the fall.

Bill Gives Hope to Immigrants

Washington, June 11.—Favorable report was ordered today by the House Immigration Committee on the Johnson resolution permitting the landing of aliens who have arrived in this country in excess of the quotas allotted to their country of origin under the immigration restriction bill.

The bill will permit steamship companies to land immigrants who sailed on or before June 8, five days after the restriction law became effective, and was amended so that the excess would not cut down the total of aliens eligible for admission during July.

Chairman Johnson explained, however, that this would not affect the 20 per cent. per month limitation and would not permit any country to exceed its quota during the restrictive period.

SAILORS JAILED FOR ATTACKING POLICE

Found guilty of kicking Patrolman William Bonner of Charlestown over the heart and trying to rescue a prisoner, George D. Stier, a sailor on the battleship Delaware, was sentenced yesterday to six months in the House of Correction.

William Canes, another sailor, was sentenced to thirty days for drunkenness, and First-Class Seaman George Mears was fined $10 on the same charge.

Bonner was set upon by the three sailors when he attempted to arrest Canes, and fought them without using his club.

BRISK BLAZE IN PRESERVE PLANT

A fire of undetermined origin was discovered today on the third floor of the eight-story brick building at No. 134 Central street, occupied by H. A. Johnson & Co., preserve manufacturers. A still alarm was sent in, and on the arrival of the firemen a brisk blaze was found to be in progress. The damage was estimated at $1,000.

"TREAT HIM ROUGH" SAYS FOND PAPA

Milwaukee, Wis., June 11.—"Three years? H——l, make it four," Russell Sage Schaefer, Racine manufacturer, said as he accompanied his son, who is twenty-one, into the marine corps at the recruiting station here. Father, mother and son chose up in a limousine.

"Treat him rough and feed him plenty of beans," the lad's father said as the boy signed.

LANDIS TO END BUILDERS' STRIKE

Chicago, June 11.—Resumption of building operations, which have been tied up since May 1 by a strike of building workers, extended nine months, was predicted today by Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, as the result of an arbitration agreement. Both sides have agreed to accept Judge Landis as arbiter and to abide by his decision. It is estimated that $100,000,000 worth of building will be undertaken and more than 30,000 men who have been idle for two months will be given employment.

FORD'S PEACE DOVE FOUND N FLIVER

Winsted, Ct., June 11.—Charles Hawley and others, while unloading a carload of Ford automobiles from Detroit, found a dove in one car.

"I'll bet it's the identical one that Henry Ford sent over on his peace ship," said Mr. Hawley, who has named the bird Lolita.

The dove will be kept at the Ford station as a mascot. The car had been detained nine weeks.

GIRL, WARNED BY THE DEAD, KILLSHUGGER

"Love Vulture" Is Slain in Denver by Wife of Policeman

MAN HAD PREYED ON OTHER WOMEN

Believed to Have Murdered Sister of Girl Who Shot Him

Denver, Colo., June 11.—Told Mrs. Helen Cass unknowingly kill the assailant of her sister when she fired a bullet into the heart of Edward (Ted) Kenesington, at the entrance to her home in Denver's Capitol Hill district?

Did Mrs. Cass recall information from her dead sister in the spirit world to arm herself in protection against the assailant?

Mrs. Helen Cass, the girl bride of Policeman James Cass, shudders when asked why she recently decided to carry a pistol for protection. She is not conscience stricken because of the shooting, which police officials, coroner and prosecutor ... In answer to ... she said ... reason for carrying a gun, she said.

"Why—I don't know. I—perhaps my sister warned me. No! what am I talking about? My sister is dead, you know. She died from being hit. A man she didn't know attacked her."

SISTER'S MYSTERIOUS FATE.

New England's Greatest Sunday Newspaper — BOSTON SUNDAY, JUNE 12, 1921 — MAIN SHEET PART II.—B—1

FROM PHONE OPERATOR TO MILLIONAIRE'S WIFE

PEGGY HOPKINS JOYCE—A genius without a doubt. Here are four studies of this remarkable young woman, who, in one short year, is alleged to have wheedled $1,500,000 out of her husband, Stanley Joyce. (Photo above by Edward Hunter Monroe.

HER REMARKABLE RISE—From telephone girl, to manicure, to "Follies" show girl and film star by the power of her wonderful personality. Now defendant in her lumber-king husband's amazingly spectacular divorce suit. (Three photos by International.)

FRITZI SAYS SHE HATES STAGE

Poor Little Miss Scheff Has Been Grossly Libelled, She Declares

By ELEANOR EARLY.

Pity poor, feisty Fritzi. No one understands Miss Scheff. And no one does her justice. They say she's of the stage stagey. They say she's temperamental, a hot spot to get at. And, mixed hard to manage. Bah! Little they know. She hates the stage. save as a means of a livelihood. And she's real. Some body. She loves only three houses with roses out front, a cozy cut back with babies inside and a nice husband in the setting.

"Little must age me not," lamented [illegible] "On the stage I sing and dance with what you'd call pep. Oh yes. And so you think I love my work. But no.

WHERE'S THE ROMANCE.

"People say to me, 'There is so much romance in the theatre.' Romance; is there romance? I ask them, 'in dirty stage wings and a painted face?'

"When I am in the theatre I love it. I am, I excited. Almost mad. As for work of love, the applause and the admiration. When I am on the stage I sing my heart and dance my prettiest. And then it is that I love it. But when I am away I never want to see it again.

"My advice to girls is this—never go on the stage. If you want happiness you never find it in love and a home. The actress is doomed to leave her home and jeopardize her love and joy. The poor little stage-struck girl thinks her smiling come from the heart. Ah, it is that no one knows.

"Tell the pretty girl, then, that Fritzi Scheff tells them never, never go on the stage. Be a stenographer, or a telephone operator—be anything but an actress. And tell them here's what a disillusioned one has to know."

LOVES THE WALTZ.

"Why I've been on the stage so long that I haven't the most [illegible] I come from Vienna where I [illegible] Danube. [illegible] for [illegible] I love to dance. I [illegible] dance the waltz as [illegible] dance I would have my son call [illegible] dance I would have my son call [illegible] her house and across her knees and [illegible] her brush. He must be spanked, but I have never spanked him. Who wants to spank him?"

Mrs. Boott neglects to mention the age of her offspring.

Says Gland Pills Quickly Restored Vigor and Strength

"For seven years I had suffered with rundown and nervous conditions. My vitality was weakening, and I felt myself getting old. I can truthfully state that I feel like a new [illegible] I am mighty glad to recommend Glandex to all. It has done wonders for me."

This is the startling assertion of Mr. A. DeLemos, a well-known real estate man of 400 Lee Ave., Bridgeport, Conn., when questioned regarding his experience with Glandex Compound, the remarkable new gland tonic in tablet form, which is accomplishing so many hundreds of miracles, especially in the treatment of "run-down" conditions, nervousness, thinness, poor blood, etc.

Amazing Results Everywhere

The reason Glandex brings such amazing results in so many cases is because it helps build up run-down glands—which science now says are the cause of many run-down conditions. Glandex feeds rundown human glands with extracts taken from the glands of vigorous sheep and cattle. Practically on the same principle as overhauling a storage battery! Also contains iron and other well known health builders.

If weak, pale, thin or generally run-down, try this remarkable tonic. Make results or your money back. Has helped thousands to pep, look and [illegible] Buy a bottle! Send at good druggists everywhere.

WHO'S WHO IN THE STORY

DRACULA, king of the were wolves and MASTER VAMPIRE, in London for purposes of his own.

JONATHAN HARKER, a young Englishman, who had been sent to Transylvania on business from London to the Golden Krone Hotel in Dracula's castle at Mattenos where a coach would be waiting to convey him to count Dracula. Harker keeps a diary of his experiences which he writes in shorthand.

MINA MURRAY, Harker's sweetheart.

Finally Harker reached the castle. Contact with Dracula caused Harker's blood to run cold.

While Harker was shaving the Count suddenly appeared. Harker cut himself. Dracula, with demoniac fury reached for Harker's throat, but became normal again. Harker has had a cruel fright.

Harker realizes he is a prisoner. The Count threatens to send Harker to the wolves. Harker finds the Count unnecessarily. He lifts a basket to look at him, but Harker sees terrible eyes. Dracula has heard a parcel packed. Harker finds an exit. He hides in the castle, but still can't escape.

PROPER OILING ESSENTIAL

Oil Should Be of Right Grade and Quantity

A common error owners should to avoid in caring is provide thorough and effective lubrication, says William H. Stewart in the New York Tribune. Just imagine trying to run the world's work without lubrication. The result would be a complete wreck. Nearly all the troubles of an automobile are traceable to improper lubrication of an engine or absolutely necessary part. WHERE TO GO ON THE HOLIDAY

AN EXPERT IN NEW POSITION

William Robert Wilson, the new president of the Maxwell Motor Corporation, is far from being a stranger to the motor car business.

When Dodge Brothers decided back in 1913, to graduate from the rank of parts makers and become full-fledged manufacturers of motor cars, they looked about for a man to assist them in building up the organization and extending the business. They found that the training and experience of Maxwell Robert Wilson fitted him particularly for this difficult task.

At that time he was assistant to the general manager and assistant manufacturing manager of the Studebaker Corporation, and prior he had been actively engaged in production operation, accounting and sales work after graduation from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1904.

The reorganization has greatly strengthened the Maxwell Motor Corporation and it seems destined for a very splendid future under Mr. Wilson's capable guidance.

FAIR VOLUME OF WEEKLY TRANSFERS

Better Business Than the Average Week Since Spring Season Opened

NINETY-NINE-YEAR LEASE ON TREMONT ST.

Downtown Brokers Are Displaying More Optimistic Trend of Mind

A survey of the activities in the real estate market during the past week reveals a fair volume of transactions comparing very favorably with the few actual weeks the business has enjoyed since the spring season opened.

Other than a ninety-nine year lease taken by the Kresge Company of the parcels of land situated on the corner of Tremont and Bromfield streets the week was void of anything more than of ordinary interest, conveyances although not numerically large were well distributed through the different sections of the city. Sales of South End properties which have been one of the redeeming features of a rather phlegmatic year were noticeable among the ones which went on file at the registers of deeds.

Downtown brokers are displaying a more optimistic trend of mind than has been evident for several months which is an indication that a revival of the activities in business properties is imminent. Only a few leases were recorded from the city proper, the most important involving Milk and Pearl street buildings.

Suburban brokers, according to reports, had an active week. Agreement papers on several Brookline apartment houses were signed during the past several days. Following are the most important of the week's transactions:

BOSTON PROPER

PEARL STREET, No. 142: Elsie Morley to M. Day Kimball, four-story brick building, 1,782 square feet of land; subject to $10,000 on land $30,000.

EASTERN RADIO INSTITUTE

SUMMER CLASSES!

This year the EASTERN RADIO INSTITUTE will start their SUMMER CLASSES as usual, the DAY classes starting Tuesday, July 5th and the EVENING classes Wednesday, July 6th. Special effort will be made to give every possible assistance to those desirous of accomplishing the work during the SUMMER months and in this respect the DAY school offers special advantages. These courses present splendid opportunities to High School students who are desirous of spending an enjoyable vacation in learning amid healthful and pleasing surroundings, at the same time providing funds for a college education.

TO EVERY student who enrolls at the EASTERN RADIO INSTITUTE, THREE dominant factors are in his favor—We are the ONLY, EXCLUSIVE and HIGH GRADE Radio and Telegraph school in New England! This gives the student CONFIDENCE to start with.

We are the OLDEST when we say that, the INSTITUTE was founded in 1913 and is now in its ninth successful year.

We are the LARGEST when we say that in that time the enrollments have grown from 1 to over 4,000 different students.

We are the BEST EQUIPPED when we say that the INSTITUTE owns chronometers and thousands of dollars worth of valuable Radio and Telegraph apparatus in the form of the latest spark, Arc and Wireless Telephone apparatus, etc.

Many graduates of the EASTERN RADIO INSTITUTE are found in responsible radio positions all over the world.

REMEMBER ... over eight years of continued RESULTS and SUCCESSES ... behind every student who enrolls. When you realize that our rates of tuition are considered ... more than small ... for the small ... and ... our years of EXPERIENCE and RESULTS, why not enroll for these SUMMER CLASSES? Just make out your enrollment and mail it today. You will never regret it.

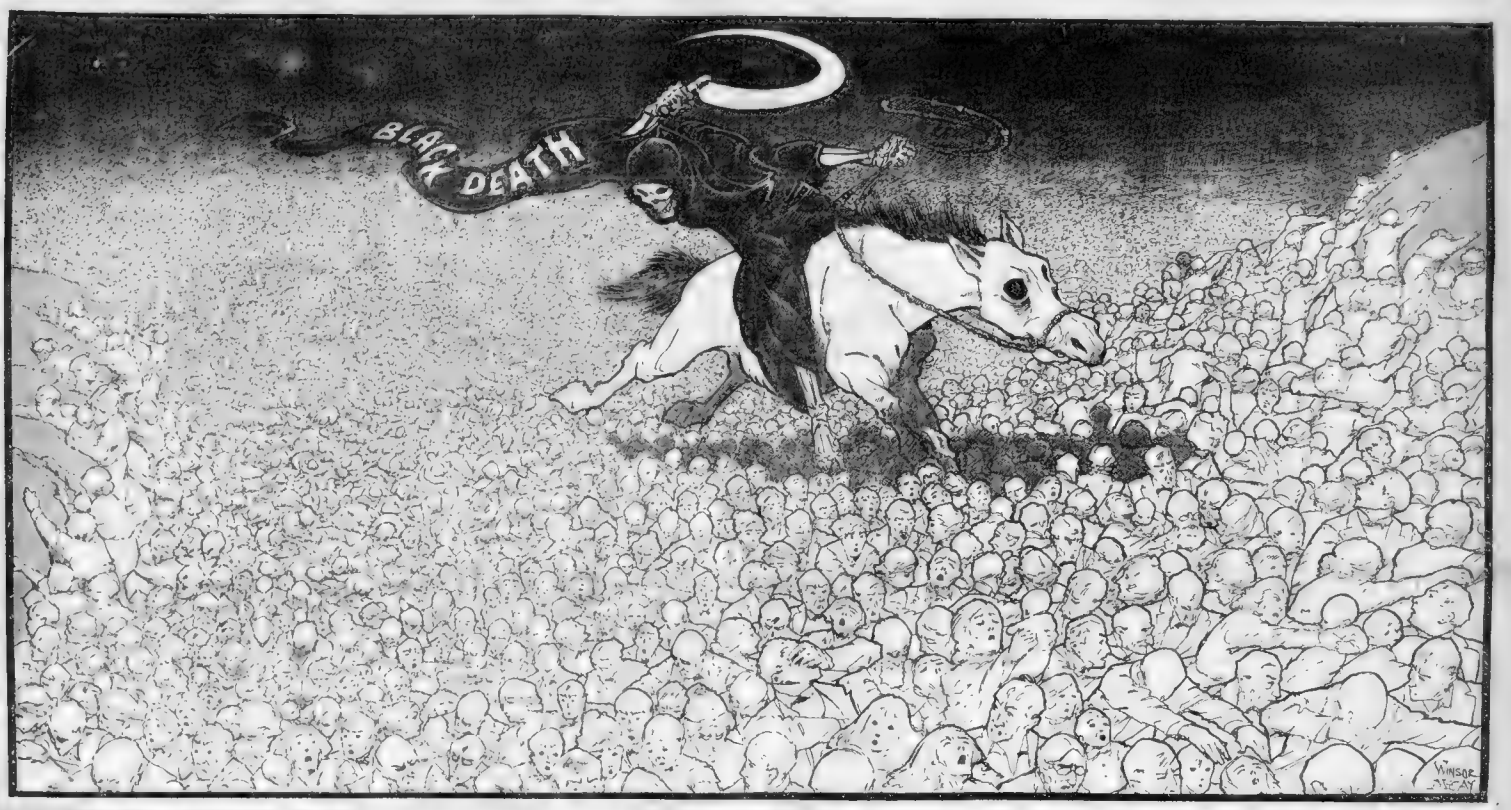
WHEN BLACK DEATH RODE

(c) 1921, International Feature Service, Inc. Great Britain Rights Reserved.



There was once a plague called "The Black Death" that swept over Europe, coming from China, killing tens of millions.

Stupidly the people met it, and most stupidly powerful men acted when it had passed.

The Black Death of War has recently swept over this earth, with a plague of influenza following, destroying many millions of people. And the people are stupidly meeting the problems that follow this latest "Black Death."

IN times of prosperity and ease, men become foolishly proud, and careless.

In times of sorrow and distress they think and learn—or they go under.

Perhaps that is why it is written: "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."

Punishment makes men question and doubt themselves if they have the right stuff in them.

After a period of prosperity, men forget that misfortune ever comes.

Mr. McCay sends along this picture of the Black Death that swept over Europe, saying: "This ought to remind men never to be too sure of themselves, and it ought to make the Government think, although it probably will not."

The Black Death, mysterious plague of which the nature is not known, struck England in the middle of the fourteenth century.

It came probably from China, where it was said that thirteen million people died of it.

China, a land of over population and without any sewerage system, provides plagues in abundance and victims for the plagues. This particular plague hurt Europe far more than it did China. When it spread over the world, China was in a state of disorganization, bordering on anarchy. The river embankments had been neglected, floods devastated the over populated farming lands and plague followed. H. G. Wells says of the plague:

"It came through Central Asia, and by way of Crimea and a Genoese ship to Genoa and Western Europe. It passed by Armenia to Asia Minor, Egypt, and North Africa. It reached England in 1348. Two-thirds of the students at Oxford died, we are told; it is estimated that between a quarter and a half of the whole population of England perished at this time. Throughout all Europe there was as great a mortality. Hecker estimates the total as twenty-five million dead."

What that horrible "Black Death" was scientists do not know. It is not even certain that the wave of death that crawled slowly over Asia and Europe was at all times the same plague. It may have been chiefly what is known now as "bubonic plague."

It lasted at one visitation for about ten years, from 1347 to 1357, then broke out again in 1361, and again several years later.

In some parts of Europe more than three-quarters of the entire population died. In the course of the epidemic at least one-quarter of all the people in Europe died.

The interesting fact for people in our day, six hundred years after the Black Death ceased its killing, is that through out all the dying, while the plague was riding everywhere, men fought and killed each other, and the rich oppressed the poor and strove, above all things, although death had cut down labor, to force the price of wages back to the price of "pre-plague days."

Wars, Black Death, even six hundred years seem to teach human beings little. After five years of war that killed about fifteen millions, and the so-called "Spanish Influenza" that killed another ten millions, men are still fighting each other The prosperous, who ought to be thankful that they are alive, are doing what they can to discourage the under-dog, and all their talk is of getting back to "pre-war wages."

The plague spared no one, rich or poor, in the big cities especially. It punished rich and poor alike, the drunkard and the preacher. John R. Greene says in his admirable history of England:

"Its ravages were the fiercest in the greater towns, where filthy and undrained streets afforded a constant haunt to leprosy and fever.

"In the burial-ground which the piety of Sir Walter Manny purchased for the citizens of London, more than fifty thousand corpses are said to have been interred. Thousands of people perished at Norwich, while in Bristol the living were hardly able to bury the dead.

"But the Black Death fell on the villages almost as fiercely as on the towns. More than one-half of the priests of Yorkshire are known to have perished; in the diocese of Norwich two-thirds of the parishes changed their incumbents. The whole organization of labor was thrown out of gear. The scarcity of hands made it difficult for the minor tenants to perform the services due for their lands, and only a temporary abandonment of half the rent by the landowners induced the farmers to refrain from the abandonment of their farms. For a time cultivation became impossible."

Human suffering, however, is not entirely wasted. The Black Death produced in England a man known as the "Mad Priest of Kent," and he worked, as others have worked, to make men realize that their misfortunes are due partly to their own stupidity, partly to the cold-blooded indifference and exploitation of those above them.

Certain powerful interests and individuals should find enlightenment in this extract from H. G. Wells, telling of that "mad priest" and what caused his "madness." Following the plague, Wells says:

"There was a great shortage of labor and a great shortage of goods, and the rich abbots and monastic cultivators who owned so much of the land, and the nobles and rich merchants were too ignorant of economic laws to understand that they must not press upon the toilers in this time of general distress. They saw their property deteriorating, their lands going out of cultivation, and they made violent statutes to compel men to work without any rise in wages, and to prevent their straying in search of better employment. Naturally enough, this provoked 'a new revolt against the whole system of social inequality which had till then passed unquestioned as the divine order of the world.' The cry of the poor found a terrible utterance in the words of 'a mad priest of Kent,' as the courtly Froissart calls him, who for twenty years (1360-1381) found audience for his sermons, in defiance of interdict and imprisonment, in the stout yeomen who gathered in the Kentish churchyards. 'Mad,' as the landowners called him, it was in the preachings of John Ball that England first listened to a declaration of natural equality and the rights of man. 'Good people,' cried the preacher, 'things will never go well in England so long as goods be not in common, and so long as there be villans and gentlemen. By what right are they whom we call lords greater folk than we? On what grounds have they deserved it? Why do they hold us in serfage? If we all came of the same father and mother, of Adam and Eve, how can they say or prove that they are better than we, if it be not that they make us gain for them by our toil what they spend in their pride? They are clothed in velvet and warm in their furs and their ermines, while we are covered with rags. They have wine and spices and fair bread, and we oateake and straw, and water to drink. They have leisure and fine houses; we have pain and labor, the rain and the wind in the fields. And yet it is of us and of our toil that these men hold their state.' A spirit fatal to the whole system of the Middle Ages breathed in the popular rhyme which condensed the levelling doctrine of John Ball: 'When Adam delved and Eve span, who was then the gentleman?'"

There are diseases born in men's bodies that come from China. There are diseases like the late war born in men's brains that come from the stupid ambition of autocrats or the brutal covetousness of plutocrats. Plagues of the body and plagues of the mind sweep over the earth and slowly they EDUCATE mankind.

There will be a great deal of education following our latest plague, the world war of 1914.

We are yet to realize the full value of the educating process that is going on now, and coming later.

It would help some of the powerful, and save them future trouble, if they would look over past history and learn for themselves what happens after the Black Death of plague or of war has galloped by.

It is never quite so comfortable afterward to the oppressor.

MISS ALICE STONE BLACKWELL

Red Cross Shows Pictures of War Children

R. A. UPJOHN

HAVE you ever wondered how the children of Belgium and Poland, France and the other European countries, live and look, play and work? If you have, be sure and visit the exhibition of drawings and paintings which opens June 15 in the Rogers Building on Boylston street, for there, Anna Milo Upjohn will show

Miss Upjohn was sent to Europe by the American Red Cross during the war to picture for the American public the children of the devastated areas. The Red Cross wanted the public to know of conditions by visualizing them. The pictures have been hung in the Corcoran gallery in Washington and in the Art Museum in New York, and now the Boston Metropolitan Chapter has the privilege of showing them in Boston

And children and happy children ragged children and sturdy children, they all speak their own appeal to the hearts of those who gaze on them.

The exhibition will continue through June 1[illegible]. Miss Upjohn is a New York woman and a member of the Women's National Association of Women Painters and Sculptors.

Out-of-Doors Activities of Girls' Club

THE Girls' City Club Sunday outing this week will be a truck ride to Scituate. Members will meet at the clubhouse at 9.30 o'clock, taking their own box lunches

The Circle leaders and officers of the club will act as hostesses on Monday night to welcome the newly elected members

Tuesday a group will take their picnic suppers to Forbes[illegible] Those in the Ford truck will leave the club at 4.30 o'clock

A number of girls have registered for salt water swimming at the Ocean Pier in Revere on Wednesday, June 15. They will meet at Bowers Wharf at 5 o'clock

A house party for Girls' City Club members will be held over the holiday at Rockport, Mass. The full group of girls will leave the North Station on Thursday at 5.30 and others will go down on Friday and Saturday.

The Durant, Inc

Membership in The Durant, the wonderful new recreation centre for women, is increasing rapidly. It has already reached the 3,100 mark.

The next membership rally will be held in Huntington Hall on Tuesday, at 7 o'clock. The president, Dr. Blanche V. Dedit, will preside and Mrs. Frank Bowes Tupper, chairman of the membership campaign committee, will report on the membership.

Folk dances will be given by Duranters under the direction of Miss Nellie Anderson. There will be singing by Mrs. Isabel F. Souther. Rallies are also being held in the towns of greater Boston for creating local members and to inaugurate definite campaigns for new members in each community.

The Bright Side Club, of which Mrs. William MacDonald is president, will open its clubhouse on Cambridge street, Brighton, tomorrow evening, at 8 o'clock. A Durant meeting at which Mrs. Frank Bowes Tupper will speak and Miss Marian Capp will sing.

On Wednesday there will be a meeting at the Congregational Church on Walnut street, Newton Centre, in the interests of The Durant. Dr. Blanche V. Dedit will preside at these meetings and Miss Florence Child, the executive organizer, will tell the story of The Durant. All women who are interested are invited to the rallies

The Woman Observer

THE WOMAN was crossing Boston Common one sunny, breezy day last week, when a bit of green caught her eye. A short black and white checked silk skirt, a pair of gray suede slippers and pear gray hose—and the hat of green? Garters, which held the sox stockings in place. And as the breezes played with the tell tale skirt a pair of bare knees were visible.

The girl? The Woman really didn't notice, but she presumes she was at least forty!

THE Women's City Club boasts of a membership of 1 66. Pretty fine! And a waiting list of 8[illegible] But only 170 members took the trouble to attend the Annual meeting held in April. Humph, according to the Club's bulletin just issued. Why?

THE general public is getting tired of creeping down into the jeans for this cause and that, no matter how worthy. This, the Women's Trade Union League realizes, so it is taking up a side line of merchandise which members hope will make it almost self-supporting. Last week there was the gingham dress which netted a goodly sum. Now the League is selling sweaters and wool sweaters for $[illegible] at the headquarters, No. 634 Little Building. This is to be a continuous sale. Others are being considered, and of which goes to show what a society, like an individual, can do when it tries.

IT was a happy bunch of children the Boston Automen's Relief Association took to Nantasket last Wednesday. At that past eight, they were[illegible] around the starting point at the Salvation Army, the Morgan Memorial, the State House, and at the corner of Beacon and Charles streets. Before 10 o'clock nine they were well under way and as The Woman washed up Tremont street she met the procession of autos filled with happy kiddies.

One big gray touring car driven by a chauffeur was full of little girls all from southern Italy, apparently, all about ten years old, at hatless, all with[illegible] and very broad smiles.

Some people didn't want to loan their cars because "children are so restless and so destructive, you know," but in these cars The Woman saw, the children were sitting still as mice, too thoroughly thrilled with the joy of the day and the sensation to do damage to expensive automobiles

Over 2,000 children were entertained by the association.

The weather has come which coaxes a woman to discard her suit in favor of a semi-evening dress, more or less elaborate which during the Winter months she wore to parties amply covered by a long coat

Now, however, she leaves forth on Sundays and for calls in the glad raiment which registers "best" but is so uncomfortable and self-conscious that she makes her neighbors on car and street aware of her and her dress. She can't relax nor enjoy herself. She assumes a wooden expression and wishes she were home.

Better sweater in street clothes, sister, than be uncomfortable in those not intended for street wear. It's painful to others as well as to yourself!

West Roxbury Club Women Elect Officers

THE executive committee of the West Roxbury Women's Club held [illegible] at meeting of the season at the [illegible] of the president, Mrs. Charles M. Lane, on Lenthe street, last [illegible] and plied the program for the meetings.

It was announced the following standing committees for the ensuing year: Conversation, Mrs. Alexander D. Morgan, chairman, Mrs. [illegible] H. Akers, Mrs. William T. Holland, Mrs. Thomas J. Kelly, Mrs. [illegible] McSweeney, Mrs. Helen F. [illegible] dramatic, Mrs. Melville C. [illegible] chairman; Mrs. Guy W. Bingham, Mrs. Fred W. Sawyer; hall, Mrs. [illegible] H. It was a happy bunch of children the Boston Automen's Relief Association took to Nantasket last Wednesday. At that past eight, they were[illegible] around the starting point at the Salvation Army, the Morgan Memorial, the State House, and at the corner of Beacon and Charles streets. Before 10 o'clock nine they were well under way and as The Woman washed up Tremont street she met the procession of autos filled with happy kiddies.

One big gray touring car driven by a chauffeur was full of little girls all from southern Italy, apparently, all about ten years old, at hatless, all with[illegible] and very broad smiles.

Some people didn't want to loan their cars because "children are so restless and so destructive, you know," but in these cars The Woman saw, the children were sitting still as mice, too thoroughly thrilled with the joy of the day and the sensation to do damage to expensive automobiles

Over 2,000 children were entertained by the association.

The weather has come which coaxes a woman to discard her suit in favor of a semi-evening dress, more or less elaborate which during the Winter months she wore to parties amply covered by a long coat

Now, however, she leaves forth on Sundays and for calls in the glad raiment which registers "best" but is so uncomfortable and self-conscious that she makes her neighbors on car and street aware of her and her dress. She can't relax nor enjoy herself. She assumes a wooden expression and wishes she were home.

Better sweater in street clothes, sister, than be uncomfortable in those not intended for street wear. It's painful to others as well as to yourself!

WOMEN are going in for the slim silhouette—and so are their husband's bankrolls.

New York school teachers are said to talk too much. Why not reverse the usual order, let the kids do the talking and the teachers the whispering.

No Corns Today

unless folks let them stay

Millions of people nowadays keep completely free from corns.

At the first sign of a corn they use Blue-jay—the liquid or the plaster. The pain then stops. In a little while the whole corn loosens and comes out.

People who pare corns keep them. People who use old treatments—harsh, unscientific—do themselves injustice.

There is now a scientific corn ender. A famous chemist perfected it. This world-famed laboratory supplies it through druggists everywhere.

It is at your call. A touch will apply it. Its use ends the fate of a corn.

At least 20 million corns yearly are now ended in this easy, gentle way. Apply it to one corn tonight. Watch what it does.

Quincy Todd on Lazy Husbands

By Roy K. Moulton

MY disreputable friend, Quincy Todd is not by way of being what you will call a lazy man, although he seems to get by with about the maximum amount of work that can be performed without actually working. But he has managed to pile up a considerable number of toadskins, which is by way of saying kale. He is a great advocate of hard work, which he says it is harder work to get four aces sometimes than it is to dig a half a mile of sewer excavation, and it is harder work to make a pair of fishhooks stand up against a pat hand than it is to build a locomotive.

"I see," says Quincy, "that a lot of people are getting quite a bit smoked up lately about lazy husbands and how a judge has got up nine commandments for one of them which he will enforce on all the others who come under his notice. According to these rules and regulations the lazy and nagging husband has got to take the old lady a box of candy every week, and he has got to get up and get breakfast and is allowed only one night out per week and, in other words, he has all the freedom of the Aquarium sea lion.

"When a bird goes home after a tiresome day dodging work and pops it off to the wife that housekeeping is a cinch and that she has nothing to do, that her flapjacks are tough and that he could do all the housekeeping with one hand and run a motorcycle with the other, the court gives him a chance to make good. However, I will say that if the average husband has to get breakfast every morning the old lady will soon get in such a condition from eating these breakfasts that her trouble will be over for all time. After a husband get through getting breakfast it is time to mutify the coroner and order the flowers.

"And he has got to wash the dishes," interrupted Elias Q. Higginbotham.

"Did you ever see a dish that a husband has washed?" asked Quincy. "When he gets through washing it the wife has to wash it again. When she goes away for the Summer there are only two ways Friend Husband washes the dishes. He either piles them up in the back yard and turns the hose on them or sets them out on the fire escape and prays for rain.

"But a great many of the fair sex get the bee put on them when they think they are getting a meal ticket, while I have noticed more than once. A lot of birds are good workers while they are single, but develop the sleeping sickness as soon as they hook up to some dame for life. When he is single he spends all his dough on himself and he figgers he is getting some good out of it. But here and there a guy gets stung just as bad. Many a guy picks out a strong looking woman who is fond of work and is a good cook and makes her own clothes, but she forgets everything she knows as soon as she is married. She is as helpless as a one-armed trap drummer in a jazz orchestra, but who can blame her?

"Which reminds me of a bird in my home town by the name of Fatty Spink, he being called Fatty because he is what might be regarded as plump, and he is perhaps the laziest guy in our village except the town marshal, which is generally the case.

"This Fatty is so lazy that he comes pretty near starving to death one time and is in bed upstairs in his room when a kind-hearted farmer drives up with a couple of bushels of corn and he yells:

"'Hi, Fatty, do you want a couple of bushels of corn? I have brought you!'

"It is shucked?' wheezed Fatty, he being very weak at the time.

"'No,' answers the farmer, 'I have driven it here as it grew.'

"Fatty sighs and whispers:

"'Well, it seems that a new manicure came to our town which is a very beautiful manicure at that and all the young dames around our burg became very bloosy over this dame. It seems she makes all her own clothes, which sets the old post-clothing to out town, and she is an excellent cook, as all her young lady friends say, and she gives lessons in piano for the price of a lot of pecan and fairly knock which is much appreciated.

"She makes quite a bit of dinero in her business, also as pretty near everybody from the baldheaded deacons down to the young society lounge lizards go in there to get trimmed, which she does very neat, getting one smack per throw. Some of these birds get trimmed twice a day.

"I only get an eye on this vision but he is right in the manicuring line, because he has no more money than a Mesopotamian refugee. He sizes this matter all up and he figgers that he ought to marry this young person and live happy ever after, but the only way he can get a knockdown to her is to [illegible] and very painful conclusion, but he figgers it will be only for a little while, for after he wins her she will make a good living for him, which is a noble way of looking at it, to say the least.

"So he rounds up quite a job at that, as he is quite a smart bird while he stays awake, and he gets to having his nails manicured about [illegible] puts up a lot of talk about his prospects. He figures his prospects will be purty good if he can only get her. He takes her to the movies and finally pops and, as she has him doped out as quite an intelligent person, which he is, and she finally accepts him to the surprise of everybody, and gets spliced.

"As soon as they get married Lutie says:

"'I am giving up the manicure parlor now.'

"'How so?' asks Fatty, turning very cold in the gizzard.

"'Well,' she says, 'I have worked all my life and I am tired of working and you are [illegible] much dough I don't have to, as I [illegible] my business is ruined [illegible] how, as nobody will [illegible] by a married dame while they are in their right senses. They don't think they are getting a sincere manicure if the girl ain't single. And I also have been supporting my father and mother and I will have them come and live with us.'

"Fatty is very groggy by this time, but he manages to wheese: 'Well, you are a good cook anyhow and you can make your own clothes, which will help some,' and she says:

"'What? With a great big wonderful husband like you have said you are? No, indeed. I must have a maid and a dressmaker the first thing. I haven't got a thing to wear.'

"Now, if she is some kinds of a woman she would go to a justice of the peace and get him to lay down some rules for Fatty, but she ain't that kind of a dame. She lays 'em down herself and, believe me, they stick. This poor prune has to go to work in earnest. When he goes home at night he meets himself right back to the mill.

"In the course of ten years he gets to be quite a fellow, much to the surprise of everybody, and is by way of becoming a very rich sort of a guy.

"But Fatty in his moments of reflection, always figgers that he gets stung when he marries this gal which is the way it goes. He is figgering on sliding through life like a giant sloth and she turns him into an ant. Which any guy who marries a manicure marries is very wise person at that.

"If this here judge gets all the lazy husbands in this country to washing dishes, cooking breakfast, taking care of the kids and doing the washboard shimmy," said Elias Q. Higginbotham, "it will be what I will call a heck of a free country."

"It is anyhow," added Quincy.

The New Generation

THERE was a wise young city bird, his maiden name was Jim,
He thought he'd wed a country lass both innocent and prim.
"Because," he said, "she will not have expensive ways and such.
And to support this maiden it will not cost as much.
She will not have the costly touch, like these here city janes,

And so he wrote unto the lass he'd met long, long ago,
Who lived out in the tall grass where the ruitabaga grow.
She telegraphed him right away that she would gladly wed,
She'd always longed for city lire, that's what the maiden said.
She said, "Please meet me at the train and come in your Rolls-Royce,
Of all the city boys I've met you surely are my choice."

He started for the depot and his heart was full of fear,
He had two hundred dollars he'd been saving many a year.
He looked well in his hand-me-downs, there in the old train shed,
But when she got off from the cars she nearly knocked him dead.
She wore an ermine coat that cost three thousand bucks or more,
And had enough sparks on her for to start a jewelry store.

She said, "Now hold my Pekingese. I'm so glad to arrive.
I hope you've got a ten-room flat that faces on the Drive."
He said, "Where did you get them clothes, them jewels and them dog?"
She said, "We had some luck last year, for father sold a bog.
We've got a brand-new limousine, a nine-hole course for golf.
If you can't make my present pace, the marriage thing is off."

He led her back unto the train and sent her right away.
He said, "I thought you was a prim and innocent young jay."
She said, "Where do you get that stuff?" and then she said farewell,
And rode back in the Pullman to her mansion in the dell.
She was a farmer's daughter, it was very plain to see,

Eating to Color Your Hair

THE wildest discovery yet made by the beauty experts is that you can influence the color of your hair by what you eat.

As the appetite is bent, so is the coiffure inclined.

We expect this announcement to upset the bill-of-fare of the entire feminine population of this broad land of the permanent marcel.

It appears that what is commonly called woman's crowning glory is quite susceptible to certain foods, especially in the fruit and vegetable line.

The orange, according to the wise boys of the beauty parlor, is the one best bet for the dame who wants a rich, golden sheen. A blonde can get blonder by orange aid, so to speak.

Each time she bites into one of the juicy fruit her hair seems to say, in the familiar slang of the day, "I eat that stuff!"

And by and by she is a perfect auburn peach.

One lady who started with six oranges a day, and doubled the dose at the end of the first week, now reports that her ringlets are as yellow as they make 'em—in hair-dressing establishments.

Now if the lady, after her prolonged diet of oranges, could top off with a good swig of gin she would find, no doubt, that her hair would change to the lovely shade of a good old pre-prohibition Bronx.

It's a great idea, just the same. Presumably if you want a wine-shade you eat nothing but grapes.

Or if you desire raven locks you might try munching a little soft coal at meal times.

Perhaps by eating oranges one week and prunes the next you could work up an interesting coiffure combining the well known Irish tints.

If, on the other hand, you happen to be a mere man—perhaps with nothing in the way of hair to speak of—there's no reason why you shouldn't just go on eating as you darn please.

It Seems Reasonable

WHEN a persons says "It's the hardest thing in the world" or "It's the easiest thing in the world" he may be exaggerating. The next time anyone pulls one of these remarks on you just check up his statement with this list and see whether you agree with him.

(1) Shaving a man with St. Vitus' dance.
(2) Sharing one's last bottle of Scotch.
(3) Trying to get work at a soda fountain on the strength of a cocktail shaking reputation.
(4) Writing out a money order with a postoffice pen.

(1) Clipping coupons.
(2) Giving advice.
(3) Delivering ice in Alaska.
(4) Getting bumped by a taxicab.

Why Belong to the Wealthy Class?

STATISTICS recently issued tell the palpitating world that, in this country, forty million people are living from hand to mouth.

It is not stated how many are living from knife to mouth, but we must draw our own conclusions.

This report means that in perhaps twelve or fifteen million homes the goldfish don't know where they are to get their next meal and the flivver doesn't know where it is going to get its next drink of gasoline. The photographs do not know, but they are taking their last whirl at life, and the fireless cookers do not know how soon they will have to go into permanent retirement with empty stomachs.

The forty million may be referred to as the more or less poor.

At least, they are not rich and why, indeed, should they be? Has anybody ever figured out any distinct advantage of being possessed of overpowering wealth? A multimillionaire is obliged to put on a hard-boiled shirt and a dress suit every evening, hot or cold, and sit down with a room full of people he has never seen before and hopes he will never see again. The poor man can jump into a pair of greasy overalls and go out and monkey with his differential or try to teach his vegetable oysters how to talk.

The multi-millionaire is a mark for designing ladies and blackmailers. If a poor man takes a side glance at a manicure in a barber shop window his wife hands him a wallop with the ham she is carrying home for the Sunday dinner and that settles that. If he has two dollars to spare he has to buy something for the Ford, and his idea of riotous living is a new straw hat every two years.

The multi-millionaire owns a steam yacht, and what a man with fifty million dollars and a steam yacht can do [illegible] is a crime. He would make [illegible] green with envy. When the bird who is living from hand to mouth wants to take a sea trip he gathers the family and climbs aboard the excursion boat where the people are packed in so tight that he cannot lift his hat to a strange lady even if he wants to. The man who is living from hand to mouth is safeguarded on every side. He has all the freedom of a goldfish.

The Wall street wiz has to call in fourteen experts to figure out his income tax and then he can't sleep nights for fear the government will get hep. The hand-to-mouther merely writes a note to the government and says: "I have figured it all out and you owe me $1.98. Please remit by return mail," and goes on hoeing his garden and hitching up his trousers on the side where the suspender button is off.

When the grand jury meets and the ocean liners are thronged by multis who are, if necessary, willing to go steerage, the hand-to-mouth citizen hops blithely aboard a surface car, where all the deputy sheriffs in town can see him, and rides to his work smiling genially upon one and all, and he can walk right up to a police man and count the buttons on his coat and ask the way to the Aquarium without a flutter. No grand jury would know what to do with him if it got him.

When stocks hit the bottom and fortunes are wrecked this poor person can warble: "Let 'em flicker," and he can lie in his hammock under his own vine and fig tree and read of the sorrowful divorce court doings of Jason W. Podsnap, president of the Sixteenth National Bank, and know that these things will never happen to him.

Alias the Lone Wolf

by Louis Joseph Vance Illustrated by Pruett Carter

A novel of thrills and action—mystery, love and adventure on two continents.

This mystery story began in the April Cosmopolitan If you have not been reading the story this synopsis printed below will give you a complete knowledge of all that has thus far happened. Read this synopsis and then you can go on with the June Cosmopolitan installment in the next column.

MICHAEL Lanyard, alias "The Lone Wolf," once a notorious Parisian criminal, but now a valued member of the British Secret Service, employing his leave of absence to make a walking tour in Cévennes of Southern France, meets under romantic circumstances Madame Eve de Montalais, an American girl, widow of a French officer. He rescues her, her mother and sister-in-law, from an attempt at highway robbery engineered by their chauffeur, one Dupont, whom Lanyard recognizes as an apache, and who, of course, promptly disappears

Escorting the Montalais party to their chateau, Lanyard there encounters a curiously assorted party of motorists seeking shelter from a storm, Mr Whitaker Monk and his secretary, Mr. Phinuit, both Americans, and the Comte and Comtesse de Lorgnes. These gentry deftly guide the conversation to the magnificent collection of jewels which Eve de Montalais possesses, learn that the jewels are at the Chateau de Montalais, then go their way

Dupont waylays and severely wounds Lanyard. Rescued by Eve, Lanyard is nursed back to health at the Chateau de Montalais, and falls in love with her — hopelessly, as he believes.

On the eve of his departure the Montalais jewels mysteriously vanish. Lanyard, knowing that his identity must be discovered as soon as the police are called in, and that no one will ever believe anybody but "The Lone Wolf" stole the jewels, reveals his secret to Eve, who expresses perfect confidence in him and even refuses to avail herself of the services of the police. Lanyard pledges himself to recover her jewels, and the better to delude the real criminals, arranges to "disappear" and to be blamed, under an assumed name he had thus far worn, for the robbery

Leaving the chateau by night, he sets out for Paris, and en route falls in with Dupont, who, however, does not notice him, and who it appears is trailing the Comte de Lorgnes. The latter is traveling alone. On the arrival of their night train in Paris, de Lorgnes is found murdered in his berth and Dupont has again disappeared

A tour of all night restaurants leads to the discovery that the self-styled Comtesse de Lorgnes was really Liane Delorme, a notorious beauty of the Parisian underworld, formerly a Quartier Latin model whom Lanyard had befriended Lanyard follows Liane to her home and secretly enters the house just in time to interfere when Dupont, treacherously admitted by a housemaid, attempts to assassinate Mlle. Delorme

Then in the June Cosmopolitan

CONCEIVABLY even a journeyman strangler may know the thrill of professional pride in a good job well done: Dupont was groaning at his work, and so intent upon it that his first intimation of any interference came when Lanyard took him from behind, broke his hold upon the woman (and lamentably failed to break his back at the same time), whirled him around with a jerk that all but unsocketed an arm, and, before the thug could regain his balance, placed surely on the heel of his jaw, just below the ear, a blow that, coming straight from the shoulder and carrying all Lanyard had of weight and force and will to punish, for all Dupont's heaviness fairly lifted him from his feet and dropped him backward across a chaise-longue from which he slipped senseless to the floor. It was just like that, a crowded, breathless business.

With bruised and aching knuckles to prove that the blow had been one to stun an ox, Lanyard believed it safe to count Dupont hors de combat, for a time at least. In any event, the risk had to be chanced; Liane Delorme was in a plight demanding immediate relief.

In all likelihood she had lost consciousness some moments before Lanyard's intervention. Released, she had fallen positively inert, and lay semiprostrate on a shoulder with limbs grotesquely slack and awry, as if in unpleasant mimicry of a broken doll. Only the whites of blood-hot eyes showed in her livid and distorted countenance. Arms and legs twitched spasmodically The ample torso was violently shaken by her laboring lungs.

The twisted handkerchief round her throat had loosened, but not enough to give adequate relief. Lanyard removed it, turned her over so that she lay supine, wedged silken pillows from the chaise-longue beneath her head and shoulders, then reached across her body, took from her dressing-table a toilet-water bottle of lovely Italian glass, and drenched her face and bosom with its pungent contents.

She gasped, started convulsively, and began to breathe with less effort. That dreadful rattling in her throat was stilled. Heavy lids curtained her eyes

Lanyard continued to apply the toilet-water with a lavish hand In time the woman shuddered, sighed profoundly, and looked up with a witless stare.

She said nothing, her look continued cloudy; but the dilated eyes followed him as he got up and cast about for a glass of water

But then he remembered Dupont, and decided that Liane could wait another minute while he made it impossible for the apache to do more mischief.

He moved round the chaise-longue and paused, looking down thoughtfully. Since his downfall Dupont had made neither moan nor stir. No crescent irises showed beneath the half-shut lids He was so motionless, he seemed hardly to breathe. Lanyard dug the toe of a boot into his ribs none too gently, but without satisfaction of any doubts. The fellow gave no sign of sensibility, but lay utterly relaxed, with the look of one dead.

Dropping to his knees, Lanyard bent over the body to search for symptoms of animation. He perceived them instantly. With inconceivable suddenness Dupont demonstrated that he was very much alive. An arm like the flexible limb of a tree wound itself affectionately round Lanyard's neck, clipped his head to Dupont's yearning bosom, ground his face into the flannel folds of a foul-scented shirt. Simultaneously the huge body heaved prodigiously, and after a brief interval of fantastic flopping, fell like a young mountain on top of Lanyard.

But that was the full measure of Dupont's success in this strategem. If hopelessly victimized and taken by surprise. Lanyard should have been better remembered by the man who had fought him at Montpellier-le-Vieux and again, with the others assisting, on the road to Nant; though it is quite possible, of course, that Dupont failed to recognize his ancient enemy in clean-shaven Monsieur Paul Martin of the damp and bedraggled evening clothes

However that may have been, in the question of brute courage Dupont had yet to prove lacking. His every instinct was an apache's. Left to himself he would strike always from behind, and run like a cur to cover. But cornered, or exasperated by opposition to his vast powers—something which he seemed quite unable to understand—and he could fight like a maniac. He was hardly better now, when he found himself thrown off and attacked in turn at a time when he believed his antagonist to be pinned down, helpless, at the mercy of the weapon for which he was fumbling. And the murderous fury which animated him then more than made up for want of science, cool-headedness, and imagination.

They fought for their mort deeply rooted passions: he to kill, Lanyard to live; Dupont to batter Lanyard into conceding a moment of respite in which a weapon might be used, Lanyard to prevent that very thing from happening. Even as animals in a pit they fought, now on their knees straining each to break the other's hold, now wallowing together on the floor, now on their feet, slogging like bruisers of the old school of give-and-take

Constrained to look to herself or be trampled underfoot, and galvanized with terror, the woman struggled up and tottered hither and yon like a bewildered child, in the beginning too bemused to be able to keep out of the way of the combatants. If she crouched against a wall, battling bodies brushed her away from it. Did she take refuge in a corner, she must abandon it else be crushed. Once she stumbled between the two, and before Lanyard could thrust her aside, Dupont had fallen back half a dozen feet and worried a pistol out of his clothing

He fired first from the hip, and the shot shattered the mirror of the dressing-table. Trying for better aim, he lifted and leveled the weapon with a trembling arm which he sought to steady by cupping the elbow in his left hand. But the second bullet plowed into the ceiling as Lanyard, in desperation, executed a coup de pied in la savate and narrowly succeeded in kicking the pistol from Dupont's grasp

Bereft thus of his last hope—they were too evenly matched, and both too far spent for either to force a victory with his naked hands—the apache swung round and ran, at the same time throwing a heavy chair over on its back in the path of pursuit. Unable to avoid it, Lanyard tried to hurdle the obstacle, caught a foot on one of its legs and, as Dupont threw himself headlong down the stairway, crashed to the floor with an impact that shook its beams.

Main will-power lifted him to his knees before he collapsed, his last ounce of endurance wasted. Then the woman, with flying draperies, a figure like a fury, sped to the banister-rail and, leaning over, emptied the several shots remaining in Dupont's automatic down the well of the staircase. It is doubtful if she saw anything to aim at or accomplished more than to wing the apache's flight: Dupont had gained the second story while Lanyard was still fighting up from his fall. The last report and the crash of the front door slammed behind Dupont were as one heart-beat to the next.

Lanyard pillowed his head on a forearm and lay sobbing for breath. Liane Delorme turned and ran to a window in the front of the house.

Presently she came back drooping, sank into a chair, and with lack-luster gaze regarded the man at her feet.

"He got away," she said superfluously, in a faint voice. "I saw him in the street—staggering like a sot——"

At that moment Lanyard could not have mustered a show of interest had he been told Dupont was returning at the head of a horde. He closed his tired eyes and envied the lucky dead whose rest was independent of bruised flesh and aching bones. Neither, he supposed, were dreams poisoned by chagrin at in what was mortal no longer mattered Three times had he come to grips with Dupont and, though he had been outnumbered on the road to Nant, in Lanyard's sight the honors were far from even. Neither would they ever be while yet the other lived or was at large.

The bitterness of failure and defeat had so rank a flavor that nothing else in life concerned him now. He had forgotten Liane Delorme for minutes, when he felt her arms pass beneath his shoulders and try to lift them from the floor. He looked up then with lustless eyes, and saw her on one knee by his side, giving him in his turn that confident and reassuring smile with which he had greeted her reviving senses a long, long time ago, it seemed.

"Come," she said; "sit up, monsieur, and take this drink. It will lend you strength. You need it."

She put a knee behind his shoulders for support, and he rested his head back upon it and drank deep from the glass which she held to his lips. Nectar of Olympus was never more divine than that deep draft of brandy and soda. He thought he quaffed life itself in its distilled quintessence, its pure elixir. His look of gratitude had almost the spirit and the vigor of himself renewed.

He offered to rise, but was restrained by kindly hands.

"No; rest there a little longer. Give yourself a little time to recuperate before you try to get up."

"But I shall tire you."

"No. And if you did, what of that? It seems to me my friend, I owe to you my life."

"To me it seems you do," he agreed. "But such a debt is always the first to be forgotten, is it not?"

"No," the woman insisted; "you do reproach me. In your heart you have said: 'She has forgotten that, but for me she would have been dead long years ago This service, too, she will presently forget.' But you are wrong, my friend. It is true the years between had made that other time a little vague with old remoteness in my memory; but to-night has brought it all back, and—a renewed memory never fades."

"So one is told. But trust self-interest at need to block it out."

"You have no faith in me!" she said bitterly

Lanyard gave her a weary smile

The cruel agony stabbed his side again and again as he, not unaided, got upon his feet; and though he managed to gulp down his groans, no grinding of his teeth could mitigate his recurrent palloz or the pained contraction of his eyes. Furthermore, he wavered when he tried to walk, and was glad to subside into the chair to which the woman guided him. Then she fetched him another brandy and soda, put a lighted cigarette between his lips, perked up a chair for herself, and sat down, so close to him that their elbows almost touched

"It is better, that pain, monsieur?"

He replied with an uncertain nod, pressing a careful hand to his side.

"The wound that animal gave me a month ago?"

"Which animal?"

"Monsieur of the gazette, I am presently the assassin of de Lorgnes; before that the ex chauffeur of Chateau de Montalais"

"Albert Dupont?"

"As you say, it is not a name"

"The same?" Her old terror revived. "My God! What have I ever done to that one that he should seek my life?"

"What had de Lorgnes?"

Her eyes turned away, she sat for a moment in silent thought, started suddenly to speak, but checked the words before one passed her lips and—as Lanyard saw quite plainly—hastened to substitute others

"No; I do not understand at all. What do you think?"

Lanyard indicated a shrug with sufficient clearness, meaning to say she probably knew as much as if not more than he

"But how did he get in? I had not one suspicion I was not alone until that handkerchief——"

"Naturally."

"And you, my friend?"

"I saw him enter and followed."

This was strictly within the truth. Lanyard had now no doubt Dupont and the man who had reconnoitered from the service-door were one. But it was no part of his mind to tell the whole truth to Liane. She might be as grateful as she ought to be, but she was still Liane Delorme—a woman to be treated rather than trusted.

"I must tell you. But perhaps, you knew there were agents de police in the restaurant to-night? Liane's head described a negative; her violet eyes were tempid pools of candor. "I am so much a stranger in Paris," Lanyard pursued, "I would not know them But I thought you, perhaps——"

"No, no, my friend, I have nothing to do with the police. I know little about them Not only that, but I was so interested in our talk, and then inexpressibly shocked, I paid attention to nothing else"

"I understand. Otherwise you must have noticed who followed me."

"You were followed?"

Ami she had found the effrontery to rebuke him for lack of faith in her! He was in pain for it that the moment seemed amusing

"We were followed. I assure you," Lanyard repeated gravely. "One man or two—I don't know how many—in a town car"

"But you are sure?"

"All we could get was a hansom drawn by a snail The automobile, running without lights, went no faster kept a certain distance behind us all the way from the Place Pigalle to the apartment of Mademoiselle Renaux. What have you to say to that? Furthermore when Mademoiselle Renaux had persuaded me to take refuge in her apartment—who knew what they designed?—one man left the automobile as it passed her door and stood on watch across the way. Could one require better proof that one was followed?"

Then you think somebody of the Préfecture recognized Duchemin in you?"

"Who knows? I know I was followed watched. If you ask me, I think Paris is not a healthy place for me

"But all that," Liane objected, "does not bring you here"

"Patience, I am well on my way."

Lanyard paused to sip his brandy and soda, and, under cover of that, summon ingenuity to the fore; here a little hand-made fabrication seemed required.

"We wanted till about half an hour ago. So did the spy. Mademoiselle Renaux then let me out by a private way. I started to walk to my hotel, the Chatham. There wasn't a taxi to be had, you understand. Presently I looked back and saw I was being followed again. To make sure, I ran—and the spy ran after me. I twisted and doubled all through this quarter, and at last succeeded in shaking him off. Then I turn down the street, hoping to pick up a cab in the Champs-Elysées. Of a sudden I see Dupont. He is crossing the street toward this house. He does not know me, but quickens his pace, and hastily lets himself in at the service-entrance. Incidentally, if I were you, Liane, I would give my staff of servants a bad quarter of an hour in the morning. The door and gate were not locked; I am sure Dupont used no key. Some person of this establishment was careless or—worse."

"Trust me to look into that," said Liane Delorme with ominous calmness.

"Enfin, in his haste, Dupont leaves the door as he found it. I take a moment's thought; it is plain he is here for no good purpose. I follow him in. The state of this room tells the rest."

"It is no matter." The woman reviewed the ruins of her boudoir with an apathetic glance which was, however, anything but apathetic when she turned it back to Lanyard's face. Bending forward, she closed a hand upon his arm. Emotion troubled her accents. "My friend, my dear friend, tell me what I can do to repay you"

"Help me," said Lanyard simply, holding her eyes.

"How is that help so."

"To make my honor clear." Speaking rapidly and with unfeigned feeling, he threw himself upon her generosity. "You know I am no more what I was once, in this Paris—when you first knew me. You know I have given up all that. For years I have fought an up-hill fight to live down that evil fame in which I once reveled. Now I stand accused of two crimes——"

"Two"

"Two in one. I hardly know which is the greater that of stealing, or that of violating the hospitality and confidence of those good ladies of Chateau de Montalais. I cannot rest while they think me guilty—and not they alone, but all my friends, and I have made good friends in France and England. So, if you think you owe me anything, Liane, help me to find and restore the Montalais jewels"

Liane Delorme sat back, her hand lifted from his arm and fell with a helpless gesture. Her eyes narrowed no more guile than a child's. Yet her accent was that of one who remonstrates, but with forbearance, against unreasonable demands.

But how can I do that?"

$5000 in prizes for the cleverest solutions of "How might the famous Montalais jewels be recovered?" Contest open to all

These Are the Judges Who Will Decide the $5,000 Contest

Francis H. Sisson, Vice-President of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York — Fannie Hurst, author of "Star Dust", "Humoresque," "Gaily" and other stories. — Ray Long, Editorial Vice-President of the International Magazine Company. — Louis Joseph Vance, author of "Alias the Lone Wolf" and other novels. — J. Mitchel Thorson, Business Manager of Cosmopolitan Magazine. — Wm. J. Burns, the most famous of all international detectives.

"The cleverer the solutions, the more delighted I shall be."

Publishers, Cosmopolitan:

I beg to acknowledge and to accept with thanks your kind invitation to act as one of the judges in the unusual prize contest you are projecting in connection with my ALIAS, THE LONE WOLF. I am honoured by the opportunity to serve in such distinguished company, and I am also extremely eager to read, analyze and ponder the solutions as they come in. It's going to mean hard work, and I loathe hard work, but the interest attaching to the job is going to compensate in this case.

The everyday prize contest has always seemed to me a singularly deadly affair, but the plan you advertise is unique as I taken together with the tremendous facilities at your command for putting it before the public, ought to arouse nationwide interest. And I would be an inhuman author did I find anything objectionable in that! Furthermore, it's sure to stimulate the imagination and I envy every [illegible] the most ingenious peoples [illegible] ever known. I shall look forward with keenest interest to the results, and also with [illegible] appreciation to [illegible] found admitting I was a bit proud of my way of solving the Lone Wolf [illegible] and that I am now [illegible] the humbling of my vanity [illegible] the wits of your readers. For all that, the more clever they prove themselves [illegible] ingenuity, the more delighted I shall be.

How Might the Famous Montalais Jewels be Recovered?

Your answer may win one of the 29 big prizes

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE'S great, new mystery serial "Alias the Lone Wolf," now appearing in Cosmopolitan Magazine introduces a famous international rogue and connects him with the mysterious disappearance of the Montalais jewels. You can read all about it on the two inside pages of this folder.

Your answer to the question as to how these famous jewels might be recovered may win for you one of 29 big prizes—the first prize is $2000.

Read the seven easy rules of the contest—read the list of distinguished judges on the last page of this folder—read the story and remember that this contest is open to all. Then try your hand at a solution of this thrilling mystery.

Your answer must be mailed on or before midnight of August 12, 1921 to

CONTEST EDITOR, COSMOPOLITAN MAGAZINE
Room 402, 119 West 40th Street - - New York City

The Seven Easy Rules of the Contest:

1. Write five hundred words or less giving your version of how the Montalais jewels might be recovered.
2. You may mail your solution (or as many solutions as you desire) any time between now and midnight of August 12, 1921. Solutions postmarked after that time will not be considered.
3. This contest is open to you whether you are a subscriber to Cosmopolitan or not. It is not necessary that you buy the magazine in order to enter the contest.
4. Employees, or members of the families of employees of the International Magazine Co. or of the organizations of which this company is a part, are barred from this contest.
5. Checks will be mailed to the winners as soon as the judges have arrived at their decisions.
6. The names of the winners will appear in the November issue of Cosmopolitan which will be published in October.
7. No manuscripts will be returned and we cannot undertake to answer any questions.

THE trail is long—the pursuit fascinating—the plot thrilling—but through it all, the reader constantly wonders if the Lone Wolf, clever as he is, will be able to restore the Montalais jewels to their rightful owner, and how he will do it—if he does.

Louis Joseph Vance, author of "Alias the Lone Wolf" has solved the mystery in his own way. His solution will appear in the concluding installment, which will be published in September Cosmopolitan.

But you will have your own ideas as to how the jewels might be recovered by the Lone Wolf. It is for your skill in solving the mystery, your talent for writing your solution in the cleverest, briefest, most concise manner that the publishers of Cosmopolitan offer a total of $5000 in cash awards.

Says His Prescription Has Powerful Influence Over Rheumatism

Mr. James H. Allen suffered for years with rheumatism. Many times this terrible disease left him helpless and unable to work.

He finally decided, after years of ceaseless study, that no one can be free from rheumatism until the accumulated impurities, commonly called uric acid deposits, were dissolved in the joints and muscles and expelled from the body.

With this idea in mind he consulted physicians, made experiments and finally compounded a prescription that quickly and completely banished every sign and symptom of rheumatism from his system.

He freely gave out the secret to others who needed it, and as all of them were quite successful, he decided to let more everywhere know about his discovery, through the newspapers. Any good druggist has been appointed agent for Allenrhu, in this vicinity with the understanding that you will freely return the purchase money on the first two bottles to all who think they received no benefit.

Moving a la Mode

THE newest wrinkle in the way of moving is the blue-print method. When you decide on a new apartment you get a blue-print of it—and dope out where you're going to put all your furniture.

Then the moving men take your blue-print and pile in your furniture in accordance with the directions.

It's a great system—that is, for those who are still able to move or have anything left to move or any place to move to.

First you hold a blue-print consultation with the family. Everybody points out just where he wants things put.

If the family can't decide or there is any disagreement the question should be put to a vote, in case of a tie neighbors may be called in to arbitrate.

If you're not on speaking terms with the neighbors—if that is why you are moving—the decision may be left to moving men them—They have an efficient way of solving these little problems; they simply smash the furniture and thereby remove the cause of the dispute.

Having worked out the blue-prints, with special reference to Aunt Fannie's rocker and the kitchen range, you hand them over to the movers—and retire to a private sanitarium for a week.

At the end of that time you go to your new address, wipe your feet on the "Welcome" mat which has been deposited on the front porch in accordance with your plans and specifications, open the door and walk in, being careful not to stumble over the cuspidor which, for some mysterious reason, seems a little out of focus in the general scheme.

The extra leaves for the dining table, you discover, are in the bathtub. The ironing board is up over the mantel, where the oil portrait of Uncle Jeremiah ought to be. The sewing machine is in the kitchen and the clothes hamper is in the parlor.

Outside of that everything is in apple-pie order.

Our Own Etiquette Column for Men on the Street

IF you find a lost child do not stop every lady that passes and ask her if it is hers.

If some fat lady steps on your pet corn do not bawl her out about it until you are two blocks away. Fat ladies, you know, usually carry umbrellas.

If you are knocked down by an auto do not stand in the middle of the street and bawl out the chauffeur. The driver following may be a practical joker and drive over you also.

If you carry an umbrella or cane do not let your curiosity get the better of you by jabbing every lady you see in the ribs to discover if she is ticklish.

Do not stand on a street corner for more than two hours and watch the ladies board the trolley cars.

Do not stop every policeman you meet and ask him where you can find an officer.

Bashful young men who wish to stand on street corners and watch the ladies board trolley cars are advised to wear dark glasses.

If a lady drops a package of lingerie and you find it do not make her describe it in order to prove she is the owner.

Safety First

THE other day a New York man, believing in safety first, resolved to rent a safety deposit box. He had nothing much to put in it except two or three photographs and locks of hair of by-gone sweethearts and his income tax receipt, but he believed the safety deposit box would give him a feeling of respectability.

He found that the bank also believed in safety first regarding prospective boxholders. After he had gained admittance to the vault room by leaving his finger print and being identified by three United States senators, he was given the following blank to fill out:

Born? Yes
Where and when? In maternity hospital, 8 a. m.
Father? Yes
Mother? Certainly Eyes? Weak
Hair? Thin
Tall or short? Generally short.
Complexion? Natural.
Build? Gothic
Business? Not so good since the war.
Teeth filled? Yes, with gold.
Why do you carry a cane? Because it can't walk.

He left the place a better man, his soul being purged by an open confession, but he muttered to himself "I foxed 'em on a few questions—the ones they didn't ask me."

The plot is sheer hokum, but we can forgive Richard W. Jerk, for the reason that the dialogue and song are for the most part genuinely humorous. The comedy in The Right Girl" is refreshing. Not a long time at any rate, since all that we heard so much spontaneous laughter. The roses passed by Vincent Wolsieffer and Tom Lewis are fine [illegible] and we might add in this place that the work of these two comedians was throughout enjoyed by the big audience present the night we saw the show. Screen Leaders Who Dominate New Art

TWO men loom up as the leaders of the fourth largest industry in America—motion pictures—they stand for more than half the motion pictures made. Though a comparatively known name Paramount pictures enjoy this supremacy in quantity as well as quality.

When Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky joined forces some 6 years ago they laid the foundation for the organization on which now not only dominates the industry, but is one the sons of every motion picture filmed. Mr. Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation combines the qualities of a showman and financier with those of a dreamer. His work as a pioneer was recognized when he persuaded Sarah Bernhardt to appear for the camera. Queen Elizabeth, home than the screen has demanded, was every stage player of note before and that one and two reelers could develop into full drama, and so he based the way for the big productions which now are standard screen entertainment. The development included the adaptation of big stories and plays, which now are looked for by discriminating audiences. And now he has persuaded some of the best writers in the English speaking world to learn motion picture technique by a stay in Los Angeles. New York and London still better to employ the ten thousand persons who entertain you at picture day.

HARRY CAREY AND HIS FLYING SQUADRON

It has been a long time since Harry Carey has used his famous and popular Flying Squadron of cowboy roughriders in a picture. The last two stories filmed by the Western star did not call for any spectacular horsemanship, even on the part of Carey himself. But in his latest production, "The Wallop," which is to be seen this week at the Park Theatre, the Harry Carey fans will see the rough and tumble him best—a hard-riding adventurer, surrounded by his corps of bronco straddlers.

Carey's Flying Squadron is a movie institution. When the Western actor first began to achieve fame on the screen, some Montana cowboys who knew him when he was ranching up in that country drifted down to California and applied to him for help to get in the movies. As these punchers were the real article and a great improvement over the store cowboys, Carey had no trouble placing them with the various units. Since then they have become famous.

TO NANTASKET

The finest harbor sail of all is down to Nantasket Beach. Boats leave Rowe's Wharf hourly. Extra boats are run on Sundays and holidays. There are enough boats to take care of the biggest crowds comfortably. Paragon Park, one of the best equipped seashore resorts in the world, is a Nantasket attraction. The sail down the harbor is filled with sights of historic interest.

GAITES STUDIES WHAT PUBLIC LIKES

No other producing manager gives more individual attention to a new show than does Joseph M. Gaites, who is summering here with his latest musical comedy, "Up in the Clouds," and none watches more closely the trend of popular taste.

"My policy is to provide entertainment for the general run of playgoers," says Mr. Gaites, "aiming first of all to provide plenty of comedy, good tunes and pretty girls, and, secondly, a competent cast, unburdened by stars with big heads and compliments for what they did years ago. My argument is that you must, before all, have some popular comedy and music to work with. Stars don't make a good show, that is to say, even stars must have good material to work with. Experience proves this. I achieved success with 'Take It From Me.' I am convinced that, acting after what suits the taste of the times and after clever, but not necessarily star performers is the winning way."

SEES REPORTER AS FILM WRITER

Benjamin B. Hampton, producer and author of the opinion that the newspaper reporter, the young man and woman who wanders daily through the highlands of avenues of life, would be the big screen writer of the future.

"The screen offers a prom nent field for the newspaper reporter and aspiring writer," says Mr. Hampton. "I predict the latter has reporting experience before he becomes a writer. I am right in that? I am saying that from experience. I have had a number of years on dailies and I know that I am not the only one who has written around scores of people and scenes and not one has ever written a line for the motion picture. Either we are better than the average writer or we are not. If we are, journalism instead of being the graveyard of ambition, as her pessimistic brother so often remarks, should prove a good training school for motion picture writers. Many of the best writers for the screen have come from the newspaper ranks. I predict that within a year or two years ago I was a reporter on a newspaper in Chicago. I was assigned to cover a meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' association. I was interested in the meeting and I was interested in the men who were present. I was interested in the subject of motion pictures. I was interested in the possibilities of the screen. I was interested in the future of the screen. I was interested in the writers for the screen. Characters which approach perfection in their innocence and beauty, but whose personalities are not strong enough to rebut the evil currents coming toward them, find their happiness wrecked by jealousy."

No. 12--The Penalty of Jealousy

By Elinor Glyn

THE jealousy of men and women, aroused by a subconscious knowledge of another's superiority of character, or talent, or power to attract love—or power to influence those they themselves love and cannot influence—is the mainspring of half the unhappiness of the world.

Whole lives are blighted and reputations soiled by the insidious jealousy of some relative, or friend, or dependent. Characters which approach perfection in their innocence and beauty, but whose personalities are not strong enough to rebut the evil currents coming toward them find their happiness wrecked by jealousy.

But what of the jealous ones themselves? How does fate repay them for the evil they do?

If they understood the laws of cause and effect, of action and reaction—the law of the boomerang, in short—they would hesitate in fear to draw upon themselves the crushing penalties which their mean actions and thoughts and words must inevitably bring.

Have you ever seen any jealous person happy—really able at all times to stifle conscience and enjoy serenity of mind? No; they are continually tormented by their own bitter thoughts and the subconscious discomfort which the degradation of their souls makes them feel, without analyzing the cause.

As soon as jealousy enters all sense of justice goes. Jealousy makes people circulate any idle tale to the detriment of the person who has aroused their venom.

One woman has taken a man from another, we will say. The injured one will feel satisfaction in hearing all the nastiest things about her successful rival, and will repeat them, knowing perhaps that they are untrue.

Jealousy of another's position will cause an otherwise decent person to try to degrade or belittle it. Jealousy among professionals of all grades is perhaps the bitterest of any.

Jealousy of his success will make a thousand enemies for a kindly man. Jealousy of a mother for her daughter, of father for son—what hideous sins have they produced! Jealousy of one country for another—what wars!

Jealousy is indeed the root of nearly all crimes and all misery. But why should we civilized peoples allow such a vile thing to warp all our progress. Why cannot evil qualities receive just as careful investigation from scientists and psychologists, with the object of their elimination, as consumption or cancer?

This exquisite octagon Vanity Case, in repousse silver finish, containing clear, bright mirror and puff, complete, with compact of Face Powder or Rouge Jonteel, $1. Without compact, 50c.

Pictures can't do justice to this Vanity Case. It's the kind you'd pay at least $1.50 for at a jeweler's—unfilled. Yet all it will cost you is $1, and you receive, in addition, a compact of delightful Face Powder or Rouge Jonteel, obtainable at any Rexall Drug Store.

Jonteel
Beauty Compacts

Are YOU using these ready beautifiers?

BEAUTY in its handiest, easiest-to-use form—that's what these delightful Jonteel Beauty Compacts are. Solid cakes of Face Powder Jonteel with which you can keep your complexion young, fresh and lovely

For Face Powder Jonteel has a magic texture all its own—a peculiar "body" that makes it go on your face smoothly and evenly; removing all "shine" without giving that "chalky" look. And adhering in spite of wind or weather It doesn't keep blowing and brushing off—to keep you busy powdering every few minutes.

How You Can Be Beautiful

If you'll take just a few extra moments before your mirror you can give yourself a charm that will be the envy of all the girls you know.

Match Your Complexion Carefully

The absolutely correct shade of powder is one of the big secrets of beauty. You can afford to go to the greatest trouble, if need be, to select the powder best suited to your complexion. Don't stop until you know the shade you have selected is the right one for you.

Generally speaking, the following rules will apply:

The Best Way to Apply Powder

Have the skin slightly moist—a good way is to hold against your face a cloth wrung out of hot water. Then apply a thin coating of the Combination Cream Jonteel, patting it gently into the skin until absorbed. This delightful cream makes the face feel so refreshed, and it gives the powder a perfect base, to which it will cling smoothly. Beauty experts will tell you that powder should always be applied this way, instead of directly on the skin.

When cream is absorbed, apply the powder Put it on sparingly, but make sure it is evenly spread. Don't neglect the throat—and don't over-powder the nose. Is anything less beautiful than a sharp line where the powder stops, or a nose standing out from the face like a snow-capped mountain?

Face Powder Jonteel is so exquisitely tinted and so smooth in texture that it is easy and natural for you to apply becomingly And, properly used, it is quite invisible.

Then the Rouge—

Correctly used, rouge is woman's greatest blessing—incorrectly used, it's her enemy Rouge Jonteel is easy to use correctly

When you have made sure you have the correct shade, study your face carefully Notice the place where a little natural color lurks—usually along the cheek bones, on the tip of the chin and the ear lobes. Take just the slightest amount of rouge on the puff and apply very gently to these spots, blending it in carefully.

If the face is narrow carry it further back toward the ears. If cheeks are thin, blend slightly downward into the hollows.

Start Today

Try this easy, beautifying process today. It's so very much worth while. And you'll find Jonteel compacts so handy to carry and so truly economical—no spilling, no waste. And they are so generous in size—larger than the average compact.

Remember to ask only at a Rexall Drug Store, as these stores have the exclusive authorized sale of Jonteel Beauty Requisites.

That the physician was expecting [illegible] one was certain. He had kept unusually [illegible] clock, glanced [illegible] and was looking out on the wall a gazing down [illegible] A moment [illegible] up to the car. The [illegible] up at the [illegible] and [illegible] through the [illegible]

A few minutes later they reappeared. With them was Dr Paul, erect, broad-shouldered, the perfect type of the successful professional man, and to the casual observer full fifteen years younger than the fifty five years which the family Bible of the Pauls, one of the oldest and proudest of Southern families, declared him to be. He was talking animatedly to his companions, whose faces were as strange to those who stood aside to let them pass as the physician's was familiar to them.

The two opened the limousine door deferentially; then followed Dr. Paul within. The car rolled quickly away. The city clock struck eight.

Three hours later, just as it was striking eleven, the same limousine rolled past the corner of Pearl and Crockett streets, several blocks away from Dr. Paul's office and in the heart of the theatre district. It slowed up. A door abruptly opened, and out into the street, among the crowd, was hurled a grotesque figure.

It was feathered like a gigantic bird, black and white plumage covered it fantastically, sticking out in all directions, some of the feathers flat, some hooked like the ruffs of fighting cocks. And the arms and legs were those of some half grown feathered creature of fable.

Only a glimpse did those closest to the automobile get before it sped away. They saw within it several figures whose faces were covered with the white masks and on whose heads were the high, conical white helmets of the Ku Klux Klan.

The grotesque figure that had been tossed out arose, shakily. Women shrieked and pushed their way back through the throngs in quick, panic fear. Then, as the onlookers realized what it was that stood before them, roars of laughter arose and shouts of "Tar and feathers! Tar and feathers!"

Suddenly the mocking laughter was stilled. There was an incredulous silence.

"It's Dr. Paul!" someone cried.

It was Dr. Paul. The eminent physician, man of wealth and position, son of a proud old Southern family of "fire-eaters," had been ignominiously tarred and feathered.

Of course it is not known whether Dr Paul's captors were real Ku Klux Klansmen or as has often happened, persons not affiliated with the organization, but masquerading under the sadly counterfeited and terrifying costumes of the Order.

But what had Dr Paul done to incur such punishment? And what had happened in those three hours between the time he had stepped jauntily into the waiting car and the time he had been hurled out of it the butt of the ridicule of his townsfolk?

All this can [illegible]

At half past [illegible] one [illegible] car [illegible] to [illegible] corner [illegible] two [illegible] support [illegible] newspapers received anonymous notes telling them that a "good news story" would be there if they wanted "to take a little ride in an automobile." They were told to be at the corner of Main and Crockett streets and to get into an automobile which will pass at precisely seven thirty o'clock and which will have the left door of the tonneau open."

The reporters presented themselves at the corner a few minutes ahead of time. Neither at that moment knew that the other was on the same errand, but each feared that he could get away from the other by making a dive into the car when it came along.

Before the City Hall clock had finished the half hour stroke a large limousine came swiftly up Main street. It swerved over to the corner of Crockett, and as it did so the left door flew open. The two dived for it together, fell within, and before they could get up the car started forward with a sudden jerk and passed swiftly out a side street toward the outskirts of the city.

When the two men recovered from their surprise they found the door shut and locked. Looking out through the glass at the chauffeur they saw that his head was covered with a curious pointed cowl, while a cloak draped his shoulders. The car was going at great speed.

They knocked at the window, calling out to the driver to stop. He turned his head and they saw that he was masked. He slowed down for a moment.

"Don't you speak unless you are spoken to," he said in a voice that they did not recognize. "No harm is coming to you unless you bring it on yourselves."

He then turned and drove on.

At the edge of a thick forest, several miles away, the car stopped. The chauffeur leaped from his seat and ordered the two reporters out of the car. He produced towels and bound their eyes tightly. He helped them back into the limousine, instructing them not to touch the bandages. After about a quarter of an hour of more riding through winding roads the car was again stopped. The driver took the bandages from their eyes and gave them suits of blue overalls and told them to put them on. Wonderingly they did so. They were then handed conical shaped hoods, the ends of which fell over their shoulders and which completely masked their faces.

All that we want of you is to see what goes on and to make a careful report of it for your papers," said their guide. "Don't miss anything and don't say a word while you are watching. And be sure you get it straight when you write your stories or you may find something unpleasant happening to you."

The reporters saw that they were at the edge of a little clearing. All around them stood, like sentinels, the ranks of the tree trunks. The forest was now almost dark. There was no sign of life any where. The pair stood in the gloom, keenest curiosity struggling with the natural depression which the surroundings and the circumstances could not fail to bring.

In about ten minutes two other closed cars came through the winding road. Out of one stepped eight men, each wearing the visored conical white helmet-mask and the white, shrouding cloaks which, as they threw them open, showed beneath the same blue and shapeless denim garments that the watchers wore. From the second limousine came four more men masked like the Ku Klux and four whose faces were uncovered. Three of these latter the reporters did not recognize.

But the fourth, to their amazement, was Dr. J. S. Paul.

The hands of the physician were tied. He stood, defiant and silent, under the rays of flashlights thrown upon him by four of the masks. He did not move nor did he protest as his clothes were stripped from him down to his underdrawers. When he was thus far undressed the legs of the latter garments were cut off short, leaving him little more than a girdle.

Now, the watchers saw another figure step out of the darkness, holding in his hand a paper. From this paper he read a list of alleged offenses charged by the Ku Klux against the physician. These related to illegal practice of medicine and surgery upon certain women of Beaumont. In two or three cases the death of the patient was charged to him. He was further denounced as "a slayer of unborn babies."

"These are the crimes of which you have been found guilty at the councils of the Klan," said the spokesman. "What have you to say before sentence is passed upon you?"

As he finished speaking there stepped out of the shadows another masked man, who held in his hand a cat-o'-nine tails, the thongs of which ended in small lead points.

The doctor glared around at his judges.

"I know three or four of you cursed cowards!" he exclaimed. "Go ahead with your farce, but I warn you now that there will be a day of reckoning for you."

They lashed his hands to a tree, and the lash fell upon his back.

At the first blow of the whip the physician cried out, so it is said: "If I am guilty of what you charge, there are others in Beaumont who are guilty as I—and guiltier."

The masked men made no answer, the whipper continuing to wield the lash until the blood streamed down the naked back and the body went limp. At this point the spokesman again stepped out, crying, "That is enough—no more of that!"

And the man with the cat-o'-nine tails stopped while his arms were still raised to strike again the fainting victim.

"How's that tar?" asked one of the masks.

"All right," came the answer. "Soft enough to stick, but not hot enough to hurt—much."

The reporters, whose attention had been absorbed by the scene before them, turned. A little distance away they saw a small fire, over which hung on forked sticks a huge pot. A cowled figure was standing beside it, stirring the contents. He lifted the stick and the soft tar rolled down it. Another mask went to him and the two carried the steaming kettle over to where Dr. Paul, groaning but still defiant, stood erect between two of the masqueraders.

As the physician saw the kettle and realized its purpose he made a mighty effort to break away. It was unsuccessful. Another of the masked men produced a broom, dipped it in the tar and with it plastered a wide streak across the doctor's chest. He winced, but remained silent. Up and down, until from neck to waist the front of his body was a thick coat of the sticky black stuff, he plied the brush.

"No," answered the spokesman; "just cover them up."

The tar was daubed thick about the thighs, covering the linen and gluing it to the doctor's body. Then the legs and feet were covered, and finally the arms and the bleeding back.

Dr. Paul now looked like a man covered from chin to toes with black plaster.

"The feathers," commanded the leader. An enormous sack filled with feathers was carried in from one of the cars and laid beside him.

Then, adroitly, Dr. Paul was tripped and fell among them. Instantly another Klansman, gloved, began to roll his body among the feathers. When the physician was dragged to his feet he was like nothing human, grotesque, even ludicrous, but there was something so sinisterly hideous in the sight that the reporters felt no desire to laugh.

The leader eyes him critically.

"Looks a little bare—here and here and here," he said, indicating the places. Great handfuls of feathers were picked up and thrust into the tar at these spots. Longer ones were stuck here and there. At last the physician stood, covered with them. In the gloom of the forest, with the hooded and masked figures about him, he was like some fabled half-human bird snared by imps.

The reporters felt themselves caught by the arms. They were thrust back into the car in which they had come; the doors were locked upon them, and their driver jumped into his seat and drove away with them. They ran for an hour or more circuitously through the woods and were then ordered to remove their disguises.

"This isn't all over yet," their masked guide told them. "You are going to be put down at the corner of Pearl and Crockett streets. Stay there for a while."

The automobile swung into the city.

Pearl and Crockett streets are in the heart of the theatre district, and at the hour that the reporters reached it the places of amusement had just begun to let out. The streets were thronged with people. As they approached the corner the automobile's speed slowed down and the two jumped out.

Within five minutes another closed limousine came racing up to the corner.

And then followed the scene described at the beginning of this story.

From the crowd came at last several of Dr. Paul's friends, who called a passing automobile and carried him into it and rode quickly away.

Everybody who has ever worn a porous plaster knows how painful and difficult they are to get off. The porous plaster is about six inches by six inches, or thirty six square inches. Dr. Paul weighs about 185 pounds, and so, by the tables, has about 3,000 square inches of exterior cuticle. Allowing 200 square inches for the head and parts of the neck untouched by the tar this gives 2,800 square inches of suffering as against the thirty six of the porous plaster—an incredible degree of torture in the removing.

Also there is nothing so hard to get off in tar, and its combination with feathers makes it doubly difficult to remove. Every little hair on the body provides excruciating agony as it is pulled. The process of cleaning of the 2,800 square inches must have been torture indeed.

For two days Dr. Paul denied himself to his friends and patients while, no doubt, the cleaning process was going on. He made no complaint to the police. On the third day he disappeared from Beaumont, which has been his home for nearly twenty years, and his present whereabouts are known to none there.

By what plea or by what method the three masked men induced Dr. Paul to get into the automobile remains a secret. The three unmasked men were utter strangers and, following the custom of the old Klan came from some distant part of the State probably.

Curiously, the authorities of Beaumont are passive in the matter. They take the attitude that "Dr. Paul brought his punishment upon himself."

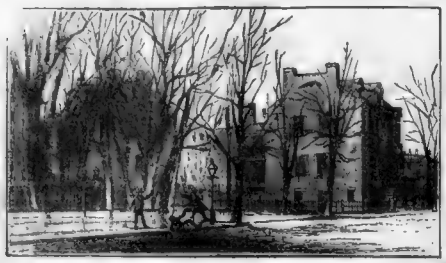
Should Mr. Stillman Forgive His Wife?

And the Famous Scandal and Tragedy Which Stirred the Public Sixty Years Ago When General Sickles Wrote His Memorable Letter Forgiving His Erring Wife



The Shooting of Philip Barton Key in Washington in 1858 by General Daniel E. Sickles.

NOW that Banker James A. Stillman and his wife are negotiating terms of agreement to end their divorce squabble, ought the multi-millionaire financier go a step further and forgive his wife?

The answer to this question, of course, depends upon whether Mrs. Stillman is guilty of the charges the banker has made in the New York courts—or if Mr. Stillman sincerely believes she is.

Either Mrs. Stillman is guilty, as Banker Stillman says she is, or she has been the victim of the most abominable conspiracy which has come to light in many years.

If Mrs. Stillman is the victim of a crafty conspiracy who planned the plot and manufactured the evidence,

Mrs. Stillman is not satisfied with a money payment and is willing to let

Nobody in every newspaper reader has made up his or her mind as to whether Stillman's charges are true. Stillman's own alleged disreputable conduct with other women has robbed him of sympathy, and the sentiment of the public is largely with Mrs. Stillman. But sentiment is not always based upon sound facts.

It seems to be clear that the exposure of Stillman's own notorious behavior has frightened him into abandoning his intention of going on with the exposure of Mrs. Stillman's alleged delinquencies. This threat by Mrs. Stillman's lawyers was a clever move. But to divert attention to Stillman's infidelities does not answer the charges made against Mrs. Stillman.

With every kindly feeling toward Mrs. Stillman it is hard to explain away the "confession letter" which she wrote voluntarily with her own hand. It is difficult to understand why Dr. Russell, a reputable practitioner, should say that Mrs. Stillman confessed the truth to him if she had not done so. It is amazing that Mr. Stillman's very able lawyers would offer in evidence half a dozen sadly incriminating letters in the handwriting of Beautiful, the Indian, and run the risk of having them exposed as forgeries, unless those letters were really written by that half-breed's own hand. And, of course, there is the direct testimony of the bunch of Canadian witnesses who swore to what they saw in the hotel where Mrs. Stillman and the Indian were stopping.

And besides all this, it is almost incredible that Stillman would ruin the name and future and rob of its fortune his own baby boy unless he at least thought that little Guy Stillman was no child of his.

This repudiation of his own little one is the hardest thing to explain if it is contended that Banker Stillman manufactured the whole evidence to get rid of his wife.

Or, if Mrs. Stillman is innocent, did lawyers or detectives manufacture the incriminating evidence and deceive Mr. Stillman?

If the Indian's letters were forged and the Canadian witnesses did not tell the truth and Dr. Russell manufactured his story—then, certainly, the "confession letter" written by Mrs. Stillman could hardly have been a part of the conspiracy. She wrote it herself.

Will Mrs. Stillman not rest until she has cleared the cloud over her name?

Will she refuse to touch the money she is negotiating for until she has passed the "confession letter" which her lawyers have fought to keep out of the court record and explain it?

If Banker Stillman honestly believes that his wife is guilty as he has charged and has the right to the strongest evidence to prove, ought he to forgive her and take her back?

Almost precisely this same situation shaped the American public stage two years ago, and the beautiful but erring wife was taken back and forgiven by the man she had wronged. The actors in that tragedy were persons of national importance.

Baby Guy Stillman and His Mother, Mrs. James A. Stillman.

Intense excitement filled the public mind when the tragic news was heralded from the Federal capital that the Hon. Philip Barton Key, District Attorney for the District of Columbia, had been shot dead in one of the streets in Washington by the Hon. Daniel E. Sickles, member of Congress from New York, because of criminal relations between Mr. Key and Mrs. Sickles. This murder took place on Sunday, February 27, 1859, and was almost universally viewed as the inevitable sequel to a relationship of guilt between two of the parties, such as, in its bold wantonness, had rarely been equaled even in circles of society far less distinguished.

Of the three individuals immediately involved in the tragedy Mr. Key was the older. His father had been a prominent man and was the distinguished composer of "The Star Spangled Banner." He was a widower and was quite noted as a "lady's man."

Sickles was a prominent New York lawyer and politician. In 1853 he married Miss Teresa Bagioli, an extremely pretty young girl.

General Sickles and his wife lived in the most fashionable quarter in Washington on Lafayette Square, within a stone's throw of the White House. His hospitalities were liberal and graceful—receptions, dinners and balls, vieing with those of the most opulent Senators and Cabinet Ministers. Of these entertainments Mrs. Sickles was the soul and charm.

Her being a universal favorite, however, did not blind the eyes of those around her to the particular attentions paid her by Mr Key. Long before the final tragedy this intimacy between the two had not only been remarked in society, but had led to notes between Mr. Key and Mrs. Sickles; the latter, however, became entirely satisfied by the explanations made, and harmony continued.

It would appear that, in their subsequent proceedings, neither Mr. Key nor Mrs Sickles acted with ordinary prudence, the frequency of their clandestine meetings and their mode of signaling to each other being too obvious to escape the notice of others. Their guilty amours were now approaching a deadly termination. On the 24th of February Mr. Sickles had a dinner party at his house. After the dinner the host and most of the guests went to a hop at Willard's Hotel.

As he was leaving his house Mr. Sickles received a letter, which he thrust, unopened, into his pocket. On his return home he opened this letter and found it to be anonymous. It stated that a guilty intrigue existed between Mr. Key and Mrs Sickles, and added that they were in the habit of meeting at a house leased from a negro, the location of which it specified.

Mr Sickles spent a sleepless night, and early next morning dispatched a friend to the locality in question to watch. The friend saw nothing, but from the inquiries he made he ascertained that a lady resembling Mrs. Sickles had, in fact, been in the habit of meeting a gentleman in the house designated.

Armed with these presumptions Mr Sickles charged his wife with the guilt he suspected. She exclaimed, "Oh, I see I am discovered!" and confessed, imploring her husband to spare her. He declared that he did not wish to injure her, but she must put her confession in writing, which she did.

"I have been in a house in Fifteenth street with Mr. Key; how many times I don't know; I believe the house belongs to a colored man; the house is unoccupied; I commenced going there the latter part of January, have been in alone and with Mr. Key; usually stayed an hour or more. I did what is usual for a wicked woman to do. The intimacy commenced this Winter, when I came from New York, in that house. Never would speak to him when Mr Sickles was at home, because I know he did not like me to speak to him. Did not see Mr. Key for some days after I got here; he then told me he had hired the house as a place where he and I could meet. I agreed to it. Have walked home together, say, four times—I do not think more; was there on Wednesday last, between 2 and 3. I went there alone. I did not think it safe to meet him in my own house, because there are servants who might suspect something. As a general thing, have worn black and white woolen plaid dress and beaver hat trimmed with black velvet; have worn a black silk dress there also; also a plaid silk dress, black velvet cloak trimmed with lace, and black velvet shawl trimmed with fringe. On Wednesday I either had on my brown dress or black and white woolen dress, beaver hat and velvet shawl."

The confession thus made by Mrs Sickles was written in her own hand in the evening. All that night, according to the evidence given by inmates of the house, she lay in great mental distress, with her head on a chair. The ensuing Sunday Mr Sickles was in great agony, tearing his hair and calling on God to witness his troubles. In the morning he sent for his friend, Mr. Butterworth, who, on his arrival at the house, found Mr. Sickles almost beyond self-control and exclaiming continually:

"I am a dishonored and ruined man and cannot look you in the face!"

Mrs. Daniel E. Sickles and General Sickles,

—And—

The Famous Letter General Sickles Wrote Forgiving His Erring Wife.

MY reconciliation with my wife was my own act, done without consultation with any relative, connection, friend or adviser. Whatever blame, if any, belongs to the step should fall alone upon me. I am prepared to defend what I have done before the only tribunal I recognise as having the slightest claim to jurisdiction over the subject—my own conscience and the bar of Heaven.

I am not aware of any statute or code of morals which makes it infamous to forgive a woman; nor is it usual to make our domestic life a subject of consultation with friends, no matter how near and dear to us. And I cannot allow even all the world combined to dictate to me the repudiation of my wife when I think it right to forgive her and restore her to my confidence and protection.

If I ever failed to comprehend the utterly desolate position of an offending though penitent woman—the hopeless future, with its dark possibilities of danger, to which she is doomed when proscribed as an outcast—I can now see plainly enough, in the almost universal howl of denunciation with which she is followed to my threshold, the misery and peril from which I have rescued the mother of my child.

And although it is very sad for me to incur the blame of friends and the reproaches of many wise and good people, I shall strive to prove to all who may feel an interest in me that, if I am the first man who has ventured to say to the world an erring wife and mother may be forgiven and redeemed, in spite of all the obstacles in my path the good results of this example shall entitle it to the imitation of the generous and the commendation of the just.

There are many who think that an act of duty, proceeding solely from affections which can only be comprehended in the heart of a husband and a father, is to be fatal to my professional, political and social standing. If this be so, then so be it.

Mr Butterworth counseled moderation; and on leaving the house for a few minutes he was informed on his return that Key had just passed the house twice, waving or twirling his handkerchief three times as a signal.

While conversing with Mr Woolfolidge, a mutual friend who had also called, Mr. Sickles came into the library and said he had "seen the scoundrel making signals," and he added, "My God, this is horrible!"

General Sickles put on his hat, went into the street, and turned toward the club where he knew Key would be likely to be found. Walking rapidly down Sixteenth street General Sickles came upon Mr. Key, and facing him exclaimed in a loud voice:

"Key, you scoundrel, you have dishonored my house—you must die!"

Drawing a pistol from his pocket General Sickles fired three shots and Key fell to the sidewalk mortally wounded.

General Sickles was arrested, brought to trial, and the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty.

Much sympathy was felt for General Sickles and no little criticism was aimed at him when it became known that Sickles had forgiven his wife and had taken her back to his home. In explanation of his course in this respect, General Sickles wrote the letter which is published elsewhere on this page.

Beautiful, ruined and sorrowing Mrs Sickles lived but a few years after the tragedy.

If Mrs. Stillman is guilty, ought Mr. Stillman to forgive her as General Sickles did? Should he also accept the child if he believes it is not his own?

Could Charm Snakes But Not Her Husband

The Domestic Tragedy of Mlle. Radjah, the Snake Dancer, Which Recalls Frank Daniels' Amusing Comic Opera Song

I

She kept her hideous secret well, oh, yes, her hideous secret well!
We were wedded fast, I knew naught of her past,
For how was I to tell?
I married her, guileless lamb I was,
I'd have died for her sweet sake—
How could I have known that my Angeline
Had been a "human snake?"
We'd only been wed a week or two,
When I found her quite a wreck,
Her limbs were tied in a true lover's knot
At the back of her swan-like neck
No curse there sprang to my pallid lips,
Nor did I reproach her then;
I calmly untied my lovely bride
And straightened her out again.

II.

At night I'd wake at midnight's hour with a creepy, crawly feeling,
And there she would be in her robe de nuit
A-walking on the ceiling.
She said that she was the "human fly,"
And she lifted me from beneath—
By a section slight of my garb of night,
Which she held in her pearly teeth.
Oh, for the sweet sake of the "human snake,"
I'd have stood this conduct shady;
But she skipped at last with a gentleman friend
Who had starred as the bearded lady.
But oh, at night when my slumber's light
Regret cometh o'er me stealing;
Oh, where are those limbs that tied four-in-hand scarfs?
How I miss those steps on the ceiling.

Mlle. Sahary Djeli, Who Startled the Audience by Dislocating and Unjointing Her Arms and Legs in Her Weird Snake Movements.

FOR twelve years Princess Radjah had danced with writhing, hissing snakes coiled about her bare body. Never once had she failed to charm into submissiveness and affectionate regard newly captured cobras. Bull-snakes, untamed to human handling, had bitten her, but always after a few weeks of patient treatment she had tamed them until in the climax of her dance she could thrust them against her bare breast with perfect safety. She had never been forced to abandon a snake because she could not charm it.

But a few weeks ago, in a New York court, she told the story of eight years' unsuccessful effort to charm a man. She was giving up Clifford C. Fischer, her husband, because she had failed to tame him. One night in Washington she teased a Mexican bull snake and flung it about the stage and wound it about her neck and it did not bite her. A few hours later, in her New York apartments, she learned from a tearful maid that during the ten months of her tour another woman had been installed in her home, and had even worn her clothes.

She had charmed sullen, vicious snakes, but she could not charm the man.

"Everybody remembers the old fable of the man who was kind to the viper," she said in her dressing room in a New York theatre a few days after the divorce had been granted. "Aesop tells about the man who found a viper on the ground half dead with cold. He took it into his house and warmed it in his bosom. Revived by the warmth the viper came to life and bit him.

"But if Aesop's man had forgiven the snake that bit him, had treated him with kindness, he would have won the confidence and affection of that snake. Patience and kindness are the charms which arouse the faithful gratitude of serpents, at least.

"I have known many snakes, but not one as so difficult as my husband. Snakes have been kind to me. I think I can say that snakes have made my professional career a success. I can charm any snake, but my charms have failed with the man I loved and married."

Madame Radjah, a Princess of Persia by decree of the Shah, was probably the first woman to dance with a live snake, and it is this feature that distinguishes her from other dancers. Born in Egypt, she came to America at the age of eight, and owned her own theatres in Venice, California and Coney Islands where she was discovered by the late Oscar Hammerstein. Billed by him for a week at the old Victoria Theatre she remained on the stage for five solid years, a favorite record.

Planning a tour Europe she found that she could not bid herself as Princess in the backlands of the continent and it was to get around this difficulty as well as in recognition of her artistry that the Shah of Persia gave her the title. In France and England and Germany she danced and more than held her own against a host of rival "Cleopatra" dancers, some of whom are pictured on this page.

Revalles, a Russian, who came to New York with Diaghileff, used to play with snakes in order to get "atmosphere" for her serpentine dances, just as Sara Bernhardt, when playing the part of a corpse, travelled with a coffin in her baggage. When in New York Revalles often visited the Bronx Zoo and allowed the serpents to coil themselves about her, a giant cobra being her especial pet. But Revalles did not appear on the stage with a live snake, though she often used a "property" reptile made out of rubber.

Nor did Sahary Djeli, an Egyptian, who made a hit in Paris with her snake dancing and her interpretation of Salome before Herod. The blase Parisians could not be startled by mere scarcity of clothing, Djeli won them by doing dances that required her to dislocate her hips, arms, shoulders and legs. But she never trusted herself with a real snake.

Ruth St. Denis, the American dancer, got her start in much the same manner as Radjah. Just as the Princess began the real success of her career at Coney Island, so did St. Denis learn her art from a troupe of Coney Island Hindus, who brought their snakes to her New York apartment and charmed them as she rehearsed her dances to the weird music of the Hindu pipes. But no snakes for Ruth.

Sitting before the mirror in her dressing room, busy with lipstick and rouge and rabbit's foot, Radjah told the story of her eight years with snakes and a husband. She talked as she made up, interrupting herself to give a direction to her dresser or to rub more carmine into her lips.

"I had doubts from the very beginning of our married life whether a snake and a man can be won and held by the same charms. Before we were married my husband's mother, over in Germany, took us to his father's grave and made him promise solemnly that he would treat me right. I knew then that he was not easy to master, and she knew it. But I thought: 'I can tame cold blooded snakes; surely I can make the man who loves me behave.'

'And I tried to do it in the same way. You know, you have to treat a snake differently from other wild creatures. You have to beat lions and tigers, for instance, and make them afraid of you before you can train them. But a snake cannot learn fear and you have to win him by kind treatment, by gentleness. You have to charm him, really. And that's what I tried to do with my husband.

"So we were married and toured through Europe. I was a success with my snakes and my dancing. My husband was also engaged in theatrical ventures and I helped him in his affairs.

"We came to America and my success continued. I helped Clifford to associate himself with prominent people. I set him up in business time and again. And always he turned and bit me. But each time I would say, 'Patience; it takes patience.' As with the snakes, so with the man.' On my money he went into a partnership and ran a New York cabaret. Clifford was there and at other cabarets night after night, but I—well, maybe I was there three times. I did not enjoy such things; I could not do my work and stay up late.

"Again and again Clifford would slip. I would say to him 'What if I tell all this in court—what will the judge say?' And he would reply, 'Ah, but you are too good for that, Rosa; you have too much heart.' And then he would promise to be good. Just like a snake, you see—slippery and wriggling out of your hands.

"I was always getting him out of scrapes. I was supporting my mother and his and some other of his relatives as well as our selves. Still, I was able to save and we had a nice, comfortable apartment uptown, with our furniture and everything paid for. I went out on a ten months' tour. I closed in Washington.

"I came home. Clifford tried to keep me away from the apartment. 'The furniture is gone,' he said. 'The District Attorney is after me and I had to sell the furniture to keep out of jail.' 'What is this you tell me?' I say. 'What District Attorney? What for? What have you done?' But he did not explain.

"So I went home and all the place was upset. My clothes were gone. I asked Mary, my maid. She cried and said she would have told me many things long ago but I always treated Clifford so kindly she thought I must know what was going on. 'What do you mean?' I asked her.

"Then she told me how, as soon as I went on tour, Clifford had taken a girl in from the streets, and she showed me a picture of the girl. Clifford gave her my clothes—my lingerie, my silk stockings, my suits. The girl had nothing. To get money to go to cabarets Clifford sold my furniture. And all the time he was writing me snakey letters about how good I was. He had called in my own doctor to attend this woman. My doctor swore to it on the stand. He had sent her to my dentist. There were bills from the stores for things he and she had charged in my name. It was too much. I went to my lawyers."

"There, she is carrying a snake that has learned not to bite," cried the Princess. "This is a Mexican bull-snake. It has teeth. For a few days she bit at me, but I have been kind. I have been patient, and now she knows me and will not bite. Here—look here"—and she drew aside the kimona that covered her while she made up—"there is where the first snake I ever had bit me—a big cobra," she displayed a scar on her breast that looked like a crescent-shaped vaccination mark.

"He bit me and I bled on the stage, and they all said, 'She will die at the beginning of her career.' But I did not. And I charmed that snake and I kept him until he died, and never again did he bite me. But this Clifford please to go out now for just a minute while I put on my costume. Then from the wings you shall see how the bull-snake does not bite me."

On a darkened stage, to the weird minor wailing of the orchestra, the Princess's dance began. With the quickening of the rythm the dancer sprang into action and whirled about the stage, her draperies floating in patterns like the motif of a Saracen frieze, her white limbs gleaming in the dusk.

Then came a slowing of the tempo, a sadness in the melody. Her sinuous figure drooped, the ivory arms dropped, the taper fingers ceased to click the metal castanets. She paused.

Then came decision. She clapped her hands and her slave obeyed. Beautifully the slave brought to her the flat basket, placed it on the floor before her mistress, uncovered it. From it came a writhing coiling snake, its green and blue and black scales glittering in the spotlight. The dancer picked it up—it coiled about her bare waist and arms and neck.

In feigned horror she flung it from her. It stirred on the floor. She spurned it with her foot, then picked it up again and began the dance of death. Again the white limbs flashed and the draperies made patterns against the background. This was the supreme moment of life—the moment before death.

The music stopped suddenly and began again in the most tragic phrase of all. The coiling snake about her arms reared its head. The dancer thrust the head into her bosom, held it there while she, in agony, writhed as did the snake. Thus, says the legend, did Cleopatra die.

"See," she said, "the bull-snake did not bite me. There is no mark. But now I understand, he bit deeper than any snake could have bitten. He sit again and again, and he poisoned the best years of my life. His fangs—they reached my heart. And worst of all, when I served him notice of the divorce action he went around saying that I had been hard to live with. The most thing he said about me, the fun he made of me—"

The big Mexican snake stirred in the basket. The dancer raised the lid and took it affectionately in her arms.

"See," she said, how this serpent responds to my caresses—and yet my charms failed to hold my husband, who should have appreciated them so much more than this poor snake!"

The snakes—little squirming, twisting vipers, and big, lazy cobras and bull-snakes—the more they knew her the more they loved her. The longer they lived with her the more devoted they were.

But with her husband the spell did not work. The charms which held him entranced at first were not durable. Clifford Fischer in real life live through experiences which Frank Daniels so amusingly pictures in his human-snake song from the comic opera "The Idol's Eye" printed elsewhere on this page.

VERY few stories of buried treasure have any official, histo recorded background of real truth. Mostly they are authentic tales of treasure buried "somewhere" and "a pirate."

But there is one enormously valuable treasure buried on Co Island, off the South American coast in the Pacific Ocean, of wh there is no possible doubt. This treasure was hurried out Callao, the capital of Peru, in 1820, when the approaching army Chile threatened to capture the city.

All the gold and silver in the government treasury, all money in the banks, the treasures and jewels and sacred gol and bejewelled ornaments belonging to the churches and the p vate wealth and jewelry and valuables belonging to the Vice of Peru and the wealthy residents of the city were gathered gether under government supervision. This vast and variegat collection of treasure, worth perhaps $150,000,000, was put on boa a Peruvian government vessel, and Captain Morgan of the Pe vian navy, was put in command.

Captain Morgan was ordered to put to sea with his valua cargo and to wait until it was safe to return. But a storm dr his ship far to the north, almost wrecked his vessel and forced to select an uninhabited island and to bury it there. The histori record of the Peruvian Government shows that Captain Morg selected Cocos Island, off the coast of Panama, and that he bur the treasure and made a map showing the exact location.

But Captain Morgan himself never returned from that voya The cupidity of a part of the crew was aroused by the sight of t magnificent treasure. They mutinied, killed all the officers, a the map fell into the hands of a scoundrel named Thompson. T original map made by the unfortunate Captain Morgan, which w taken from his dead body by the murderous mutineer Thompso is now said to have fallen into the hands of a party of New Yo ers, who have quietly outfitted an expedition and are on their w to Cocos Island to dig in the spot marked on Morgan's map.

But even if the treasure seekers really have Captain M gan's map, it is not at all certain that they can locate the bur millions, because the directions require that a little river empty into the sea be followed a certain distance to a certain spot. V canic convulsions have shaken the island more than once a changed the river course. Will the treasure hunters be able trace the old river bed, long since overgrown by the tropical jung with them that they should return to their own country and divide their loot among their crews in perfect safety.

This is the treasure made famous by Robert Louis Stevenson "Treasure Island," and the history of the previous efforts to cover this treasure and the interference of pirates and mishaps the many ill-fated expeditions makes a fascinating and drama record, even more remarkable than Stevenson, the novelist, s pected when he wrote his masterpiece.

But the buccaneers were different. They were pirates in name as well as in fact. They acknowledged allegiance to no one except themselves, and their black flag was their only emblem of distinction. For such as these, Benito among them, there was no haven. They were doomed to death by all nations. It was their custom occasionally to divide their loot, giving each member of their crews their rightful share of the spoils accumulated, and then disband. The pirate chieftains, however, always discouraged this idea. They preferred to cache their loot, promising their men to return for it after the next big haul, thus keeping their bands together.

CHAPTER III.

THE value of the treasure hidden in Cocos Island by the pirate Benito, as was told last week on this page, is variously estimated to be between $11,000,000 and $25,000,000. Tradition always adds to the value of pirate hoards, but the former figure is the very lowest estimate, based upon the actual records of his depredations, which still exist in Peru, Chile and Ecuador.

The most of this was in those coins of romance, the Spanish gold doubloon—worth now about eight dollars. But in this pirate's loot there was a great quantity of jewelry, gold, silver and rich gems. It is said on the authority of one of his own men, whose story is of record, that on his last visit to Cocos Island Benito carried his loot ashore in eleven chests, which he buried in three different places

To-day, of course, it seems fanciful that any one with a store of gold, even ill-gotten, should take the trouble, and the risk, to bury it on a far away, isolated island for safe keeping. But, circumstances were different in the days of the pirates than now.

There were, of course, two kinds of pirates. The privateers, such as Drake and Morgan, were really free lance soldiers of Spain, France or England, three nations always at war in those days. They held real commissions from their sovereigns; they murdered in the name of their king and robbed for the sake of their queen. The hand of every other nation than their own was against them, but under their national flag they found protection, and when their ships were booty laden it was a matter of course

There was but one way for them to put their booty where it would be safe—to bury it some place where it would not be found. It was not often that this buried treasure was allowed to remain in one place long—usually a few months at a time. But in the case of Benito and other pirates who chose Cocos Island for their safety vault, and who will be told of later on these pages, circumstances caused their hoards to remain unreclaimed.

After sacking the rich city of Lima, as described last week, Benito sailed to Cocos Island, where he once before had hidden a large treasure. There was no objection upon the part of his crew to hiding this new loot of Lima, as Benito was deserting the other ships he had captured and manned with pirates to help him in his assault upon the town, and his crew was glad enough to get away and keep the treasure for themselves. After they landed, however, the men began to grumble. They proposed to Benito that they recover the treasure already buried there, divide it and the new loot and end the pirate cruise—retire to the mainland, each man with his share, and settle down to a life of ease and luxury. Benito asked time to think this project over and dealt out extra portions of rum. That night, with a handful of his most dependable confederates, Benito killed half the rebellious crew and so overawed the remainder that they abandoned their threatened mutiny and returned to the ship after the treasure had been buried.

Among those who helped the pirate chief in the slaughter was Chappelle, the Frenchman, who later ran across Thompson, as was told last week, and from whom comes the record of that last visit of Benito to the island.

The bodies of the slain pirates were left on the beach. Benito sailed south and went around the Horn and north into the waters around the West Idies, always at that time profitable hunting ground for the buccaneers. Here he waylaid several Spanish ships, among them a galleon bearing gold to pay troops stationed in Cuba, and two English trading vessels, from which he made a rich haul.

On one of the English ships there was a British officer being sent to Cuba as a representative of the British government. This officer, Sir Edward Peyton, had taken with him his wife and eighteen-year-old daughter, Margaret. When the pirates boarded the ship Sir Edward barricaded himself and his family in their cabin. His daughter stood beside him, a pistol ready. It was Benito himself who threw himself against the frail cabin door and broke it in. He was met with two shots, one from the father and one from the daughter. One struck him in the shoulder.

With a curse the pirate struck down the father, while his men, pouring into the little room, soon overpowered the daughter and her mother. Benito, angered by his wound, ordered the girl taken to the deck. When he had finished looting the ship and transferring his booty to his own vessel, he ordered the girl also transferred. The English ship was then scuttled and left to sink, with all its survivors aboard.

One may easily imagine the fate of the eighteen-year-old English girl. The pirate captain claimed her as a part of his share of the loot. Chappelle told how her screams echoed through the ship at night until members of the crew swore beneath their beards, fearing the piercing shrieks might be heard across the waters by some lurking foe.

She was kept prisoner in Benito's cabin. After a few days she disappeared from the ship. None asked the captain how. The crew knew she had been thrown overboard, either already dead as the result of her tortures or with mouth gagged and hands bound that she might sink forthwith.

The disappearance of this British ship, which carried much English gold, caused more indignation than usual in England, because of its distinguished passengers. A man o' war, the Espiegle, set out from Halifax, with orders to scour the seas until Benito was captured, it being generally accepted that he was the guilty pirate.

It took the Espiegle a year, but in 1823 she trapped Benito off the coast of Florida and captured him, with all his crew. The prisoners were landed at Havana, and all were promptly hanged, with the exception of one man, Chappelle, who successfully tricked the authorities with a tale of how he had been captured on a French ship and forced by Benito to join the pirates. He was fortunate enough to have sailed once on a trader from Havana, and found a skipper in port who had known him as an apparently honest seaman. The authorities were convinced of his tale and released him

Five years later, in the new city of Panama, Chappelle, still seeking an opportunity to get together a band of cutthroats, seize a ship and sail for Cocos Island, where he knew the treasure of Benito was buried, met another man on the same sort of business—Thompson, the survivor of Captain Morgan's crew, and the only man who knew how to find the gems and doubloons buried on the same island by the Peruvian officer.

Thompson, in whom Chappelle recognized a kindred spirit, listened to the latter with a great deal of interest, all the time keeping his own secret. He wanted to join no party in which he would have to share the leadership with another. And he knew the ways of any mariner who was also treasure seeker and ex-pirate. His neck itched every time he thought of going to sleep on the same boat with this other pirate, should they find their different treasures, and leaving the other awake with his cutlass handy.

Thompson, however, drew all the information he could from Chappelle, professing all the time a willingness to join him and help raise a company that could be depended upon. After each conversation with Chappelle, Thompson made notes. He knew the island, although he declared to his new friend that he never had heard of it. When the latter described the flat-sided rock, "on top of the high ground," "near a landing place in the harbor," on which Benito had cut directions, "West XX North. Tree," Thompson knew just where that flat-sided rock was situated, just which of the two harbors his friend meant, and almost where the tree stood around which, undoubtedly, Benito had excavated his hiding places.

Thompson mentally decided that when he succeeded in finding his own treasure he would investigate that rock, and, if Chappelle's story were verified by the discovery of Benito's mark, he would make a double find.

Thompson managed to persuade Chappelle to try and enlist a crew with which to sail on some outbound ship, with the intention of seizing it at the first opportunity, in some port further south, while he continued to try at Panama. Chappelle consented, and shipped on a coast

After Thompson died and when Keating was repeating his many conversations to to his friend, Captain Bogue, with whom he made his first trip to the island, as described heretofore, he dwelt at first on Thompson's knowledge, from Chappelle, of Benito's hiding place, but Captain Bogue was not disposed to grant much importance to this part of the tale.

"One treasure is enough for us to look forward to," he said to Keating. "If we find the one then we can recall Thompson's talk of the other and go after it with enthusiasm. Let us concentrate upon the map."

Consequently Keating said but little about the Benito treasure afterwards, and only his relatives, to whom he repeated everything Thompson said frequently, remembered it. It was these who recalled it when there was wide publication years later of the story of the British navy captain, Schrapnel, who told of finding the exact markings Thompson had described on a rock at the edge of high ground over one of the Cocos Island harbors. Captain Schrapnel did not know what those markings meant; he could not even translate "West XX North—Tree" to mean twenty paces west, then twenty paces north, at the base of a large tree to be seen close by from there. And if he had so translated the mark and had interpreted the signature "B" cut below to mean "Benito," he might not have concluded that these were directions to the finding of the stolen riches of the wealthy city of Lima.

It is such coincidences as these, however, countless happenings of individual unimportance but of almost startling import when pieced together, that have served to convince the most skeptical that at last there has been found the right key to the almost fabulous hidden wealth of Cocos Island.

It has taken years of painstaking work to put together the many clues to fit the history of Chappelle, for example, into the history of Thompson; to find that what Thompson, off in Newfoundland, was saying of Chappelle, lost for a time in South America and then dying in California, a pauper, "fit in" with the stories Chappelle used to tell his coffee customers, only to be laughed at; to search back along the line of relatives and friends of Keating, to discover suddenly and in a most unthought-of place that behind that terse story of Captain Schrapnel the distinguished navy officer, of the "markings on the rock," there was a story told by Thompson and almost forgotten by Keating of the burial of Benito's treasure and Chappelle's remembrance of the directions carved on the huge stone.

The hut of one of the old treasure hunting expeditions on Cocos Island.

Until now no one ever took the trouble, nor had the time and patience, to trace backward through the subjoined lives of Thompson, Keating and Chappelle; to put what one descendant of Keating had remembered of him together with scraps of remembrances treasured by another distant relative. And none have had the inspiration and the guidance of a piece of parchment paper, declared by a government's experts to be just as old as it purported to be, the history of which could be definitely traced back almost to Captain Morgan—who watched while the wealth of Peru was being buried.

When Thompson died, as has been told before, Keating's friend, Captain Bogue, who had promised to find a way to take Thompson and Keating to the island, was in Canada looking up records then extant which told of the sailing of Captain Morgan with the Peruvian government's treasure and the burial of that treasure on an isolated island. Convinced that Thompson was telling the truth and that he held the key to millions, Captain Bogue arranged with a company which was then sending a steamer into the waters adjacent to Panama, to give him passage with Thompson and Keating, and to permit him to have the ship, after it had discharged its cargo at Panama, for a visit to the island, four hundred miles off shore

It was arranged that the regular captain should retain active command, but that after Panama was left behind Captain Bogue should direct the ship's course and operations during its trip to Cocos Island.

With these arrangements perfected Captain Bogue returned to Newfoundland. Thompson had been dead two weeks. Keating, however, was in possession of the map, and knew it almost as well as Thompson, and had made careful memoranda of all the verbal instructions Thompson had given him. These included instructions Keating had written down an hour before Thompson died and which Thompson, scanning them with eyes out of which the light was even then fading, had signified to be correct. These were:

"Go to the north of the island and follow the coast line of the east bay until you find a creek running back from shallow water. From the high water mark of this creek climb along the bed of the stream which flows from inland, measuring seventy paces west by south. There you will see, clear against the sky line and quite close, a gap in the hills. From anywhere else the gap is invisible. Walk north until you cross another stream. You will then soon see a rock with a smooth face like a wall. It rises sheer up a cliff. About five feet from the ground you will see a crevice into which a man may insert his thumb.

"Insert an iron bar in this crevice or hole and lever outwards. That will cause a large piece of the rock to fall outward. A man may easily crawl through this opening, and inside he will find a roomy cave in which Captain Morgan's men, under my (Thompson's) direction, left all the treasure he had brought away from Peru. The treasure was in sacks and chests and some, even, wrapped in bundles. It includes the gold and silver coins that were in the vaults of the Lima Bank, the church images and crucifixes and gold altar ornaments from the cathedrals. Also there are ship's boxes in which there are jewel cases filled with precious ornaments, bracelets, necklaces and rings, which belonged to the rich families and which were taken away in the flight of the women who joined Captain Morgan's company. All of these the captain put in the ship's boxes. Altogether the treasure is worth more than thirty million British pounds ($150,000,000)."

On the back of Thompson's map there were written other directions supplementing these. These were in the form of arrows and dots, and were the key to observations to be taken from a first landing place, "a rock in the outer bay which squats like a lion," from which a hill slightly higher than others in the vicinity might be seen. By sailing toward this hill, the summit of which was marked by a dot on the reverse of the map, a proper landing place would be made in the vicinity of the "stream which emptied near shallow water in the harbor." From the mouth of this stream the same high hill could still be seen, while from the mouth of another the summit was invisible.

Thompson's verbal instructions to Keating, which the latter wrote down, have survived only from mouth to mouth. The writing Keating made was lost long ago There were several who saw the written transcription, and who remembered the different sentences, and from many different source of information these different reports have been checked up.

Some discrepancies have been found in the repetitions from generation to generation, and these discrepancies may have been the result of the failures of many of the expeditions which have gone to the island, depending upon maps drawn from the memories of some who saw the Thompson map in Keating's hands and the memories of these verbal instructions. None has had the map itself, with its definite key, by which the right landing may be made, the right stream identified beyond all doubt. The map shows, in one corner, an outline of the face of the rock "in which there is a small crevice," and describes the topography of the immediate locality.

Captain Bogue was so well satisfied with the definite clues in Keating's possession that he sailed with Keating in full confidence that the treasure would be found—a confidence that events proved was justified, as will be seen in the next chapter.

The Gates of Hope — by Anthony Carlyle

CHAPTER XX.

"HAVEN'T I as much claim as Araby to your friendship?"

That which was in Jasper Waldron's voice and eyes, rather than the question, dissipated the remnants of Marcia's composure. She was for the moment like the veriest school girl. No man had ever looked at her quite like this before. No man's voice had warmed as Waldron's warmed now.

She was startled; taken aback. His earnestness brought the breath fluttering to her lips. It was an emotion which was quite genuine. She felt that it was that which robbed her of her usual coolness and poise. She hated herself for blushing, wondered indignantly why she should; and with an effort caught at her self control.

With a further effort she forced herself to speak lightly; but there was a flicker of shyness under the thick, dark lashes as she looked at him.

"Of course—at least—I suppose so. Only"——

"Only what? Are you going to tell me that I do not appeal to you as a friend?" Again the half hint of reproach in his voice. She made a quick little gesture.

"You know I am not! But 'friendship'—to my way of thinking—is a big word; not to be lightly used, or lightly thought of. There"—her soft voice sobered—"there is something too sane and comforting about it for misuse. And—I don't know why—but Miss Trask makes me feel like that. Warm somehow and—and certain of someone who understands to turn to. It is rather strange—in so short a time!"

Her voice wavered on the question. Waldron was still looking at her intently, and, now, with something of her own soberness. He answered quietly:

"True friendship, like love, is born—I believe—in a touch, the clasp of a hand—a glance. I suppose that's why it is so rare. I suppose, too, there are lesser friendships, like lesser loves. I have made many friends, with men and with women—but only one great one. And that is the least demonstrative of all."

She looked at him curiously. His voice had warmed again; there was a little passing glow behind his eyes. She spoke before she realized what she was saying:

"With a man?" She was instantly angrily conscious of a certain eagerness in her voice, and of her rising color. She looked down, biting her lip.

Waldron's laugh relieved her, brought her eyes back quickly to his face. It was boyish, amused.

"My dear lady! But, of course! Great friendship between a man and a woman is the rarest thing in the world. It is almost impossible."

With a self possession had come back to her. She laughed, a little, self conscious laugh.

"My dear man!" she mocked. "What about those really happily married couples one meets?"

Waldron's lips twitched humorously; not unkindly.

"They are so unique they don't seem real!"

"I didn't know you were a cynic!" Marcia felt that she was steering the conversation into lighter channels; but Waldron's eyes sobered instantly.

"I did not mean to be. Friendship is the only true basis for marriage. Friendship—real friendship—is another, and purer, way of spelling love. When the two merge and exist between man and woman the result is something mystical, wonderful and—holy!"

Marcia stirred slightly. There was a ringing conviction in the man's voice for all its quiet. She found her interest in him warming, despite herself. She did not answer. Quite suddenly she felt how young she was; and how ignorant.

In the humdrum days that lay behind her she had never thought of love. Her mind had been occupied with the daily task, and the discomfort of a weary body. Marriage she had regarded little save as a mere form. It's significance had meant nothing to her.

Now, quite suddenly, she found herself looking upon the whole thing with different eyes. Her vitality had burned higher under the influence of this last week's excitement, new comfort and luxurious living. She was no longer half starved in mind and body. The woman in her was quickening, awakening. She felt the change without realizing what it was, and it disturbed her.

Yet it did not distress her. More than ever she hungered to taste all that she had missed in life, all that life might have to offer her. And there was so much. She knew it; knew it more keenly whenever she was with Araby Trask, or this man—more particularly, perhaps, when with him. He was so vigorously full of life, so big. He gave so vivid an impression of great strength of reliability. And something of the freshness of wide spaces clung about him still, even here in the artificial atmosphere of social London.

As she remained silent it was Waldron who spoke at last. He was smiling again, that sunny, kindly smile of his, and now his brown hand lay across the table, palm upward.

"Well?" he asked, lightly enough, but with an underlying gravity in his voice. "Are you going to let me count myself one of your friends?"

Marcia looked up quickly. The wild rose color was in her cheeks; again the man was impressed with her look of new youth, impressed, too, by a certain fragility in her loveliness. The shyness was flickering alluringly under the half veiling lashes.

"But, of course—if you really want to!"

A trifle hesitatingly she slipped her slim hand into the broad brown palm. There was a very odd expression in Waldron's face as he looked down at it. He spoke upon an impulse that surprised himself.

"I want to very much. More than I have wanted anything for a very long time!"

During the rest of the dinner he did his utmost to amuse her. He pointed out people of interest and importance as they came and went. He made her laugh with little gay anecdotes. He told her stories of those many places which he had visited in his travels. And he was careful that no further hint of seriousness should creep into the conversation.

He felt that already their friendship was progressing very satisfactorily. And he had no wish to scare her, to do or say anything that would change her attitude toward him of frank liking. She was so much younger than he had realized, and so much less learned in the lore of life.

As presently, having wrapped her in the rose-hued loveliness of her cloak, they moved down the room and out through the doors a man came running lightly up the steps. He glanced up as he passed them, and, meeting Waldron's eyes, stopped dead.

"Jasper!" His hand flashed out. Waldron's gripped it eagerly.

"Kemp! Old man! I've simply caught more than a glimpse of you since I've been back! Where on earth have you been hiding yourself? But I forget!"

He turned toward Marcia Rossiter, rising Rosslaer. She had sunk back, all the high color draining out of her cheeks. Her eyes were wide almost frightened. Waldron gave a little exclamation of wonderment.

It was Rosslaer who recovered himself first. He gave Marcia a little smiling easy nod that made her gasp.

"Hallo, Miss Halstead! How are you?"

He exchanged a further airy sentence or two with Waldron then, trailing off into an excuse about being late for an appointment, disappeared.

Waldron looked concernedly at the girl. "What's the matter?" he asked. "You're quite white."

"You're doing too much!" he asserted. "You want to go slow. There's plenty of time!"

Marcia's lips twitched suddenly, involuntarily she shivered. Then she laughed.

"The Bird of Time has but a little way
To fly—and lo! the Bird is on the wing"

she quoted. There was a weariness in her voice that made him look at her quickly, frowningly. But he did not speak immediately. When he did it was completely changing the subject.

"Talk of the devil!" he said. "You remember I was saying I had made a great friendship with one man? It began years ago—when we were boys. It has never wavered, though often there have been years between our meetings. And when we do meet it's as cordially as if we were the merest acquaintances. Well—that man is Kempton Rosslaer!"

CHAPTER XXI.

ROSSLAER went somewhat blunderingly up the room, picking out a table at random. He had left Araby twenty minutes ago, feeling shaken and on edge. His chance encounter with Marcia just now had shaken him still more.

He realized, suddenly, that such meetings could quite possibly be of daily occurrence if she really had changed her mind and meant to stay in town. They would be trying, to say the least of it, for both of them. A constant and painful reminder of the secret bond between them.

He ordered a cocktail almost savagely, and when it came swallowed it at a gulp. As he set the glass down he became aware that a woman at a table just across the room was trying to attract his attention. Recognizing his stepmother his face hardened, grew grim.

He had scarcely seen her since that unforgettable night over a week ago. He had avoided going home as much as possible; he had been in no mood to talk to her, to meet young Ruthven, or to listen to Lord Rosslaer's querulous questionings and complaints. The sight of Lady Rosslaer now jarred him, brought back with a force that made him wince all that had happened.

For a moment he thought of taking no notice of her. Then, reluctantly, he rose and walked across to her table. She was alone; but there was an empty coffee cup on the table opposite her, a crumpled napkin lay beside it.

She gave him her hand, and he released it almost immediately. She made a half nervous gesture, toward the place opposite to her.

"Gordon is with me," she told him. "He has gone to telephone somebody. I want to have a talk with you before he comes back. Do sit down—tell them to serve your dinner here."

"Thanks!" Rosslaer pushed aside the coffee cup and sat down. "I'll order another cocktail, but I think I'll have my dinner after our talk. Not that I can imagine what you can have to talk to me about."

The woman stirred restlessly. Her vividly beautiful face was pale and looked a little haggard. For the first time Kempton noticed fine lines at the corners of her eyes. There was a feverish brilliance in the eyes themselves. They met his in a momentary flash of resentment.

"Don't be hateful! Kemp"—she leaned a little across the table to him—"there's no use in being bitter against me! What happened wasn't my fault. Gordon was desperate, beyond himself—mad!"

Her lips twitched, she gave a little shiver and reaching for her furs pulled them up over her shoulders. As he did not answer she went on:

"It was cruel of you to—to keep away as you have done. I'm still utterly in the dark as to how you managed—what happened! I've been wretched—miserable—on edge the whole time. I—I've hardly known what to expect; what might crop up!"

Kemp's face was set as stone. He called his waiter and ordered another cocktail. Lady Rosslaer watched him as he drank it a little uneasily. She did not in the least understand Kempton Rosslaer, or in her heart was the least bit afraid of him. He had never succumbed to her fascinations; they had not made any pretense at being friends. And already she had proved that his careless boyishness was of the surface only; that there was a stern or stuff beneath. His attitude now angered her.

"Everything has been horrible!" she went on resentfully. "My nerves are in tatters! Gordon is frightfully in debt, and no father won't do anything—says he can't!"

Beneath the scornful unbelief in her tone Kempton stirred sharply.

"I can well believe it!" he retorted. "His resources have been pretty well drained!"

Lady Rosslaer's little movement of fury overset her cup. Her eyes blazed at him suddenly.

"You—you talk!" she flung at him. "You've helped to drain them as much as anyone else!"

She stopped short. There was a sudden haggard weariness in Kempton's eyes that silenced her. He got without haste to his feet.

"I know! But reproaches aren't going to do any good!"

"But"—she caught at his arm—"I tell you something must be done. Things are getting really serious. If they had not been Gordon would never—would never—Kemp, for heaven's sake try and make your father see that things are really desperate! That he must do something. He'll listen to you"—

Kemp laughed rather harshly.

"You overrate my influence!" he said dryly. "And you appear to forget that I'm in the same boat! But as far as the pater is concerned I rather fancy he's completely at the end of his tether. Anyway, I know I can't persuade him to alter his mind."

His stepmother bit her lip. She still held his arm. She tightened her grip as he was about to move.

"Something's got to be done!" she persisted stubbornly. Then, as Gordon appeared in the doorway and a hovering waiter came to the table, she sat back. But as Kemp bowed and was about to move away she stayed him hurriedly.

"But," she said, in a lowered voice, "you haven't told me anything! I mean—are you sure that—that it is all right? That there is nothing to keep worrying about as regards the jewels?"

Kemp's movement was almost violent, his face quite white.

"I told you at the time. They were put back safely—before they were missed."

She drew a long breath. Kemp turned as Gordon reached his side. He nodded a curt greeting, and the boy slumped down into his chair. He avoided his half-brother's eyes carefully.

"Just saw Jasper Waldron going out with that girl who used to be

The Story of an Heiress Under Sentence of Death

with Audrey Alden—she's no end a peach! Must be something in the story of her comin' into a fortune after all!"

Lady Rossiner looked up quickly at Kempion

"Do you know if there is?" she asked. He answered stiffly.

"It is quite true, I believe."

"Lord!" Some folks have all the luck!" Young Ruthven's voice was querulously discontented. He added, idly

"Rummy having the same name as you, mater. Don't you wish she was a relation!"

Kempion glanced at him quickly For the moment he had utterly forgotten the circumstances under which Marcia had mentioned her relationship to Lady Rossiner. He remembered hearing of it: was under the impression it was public knowledge.

"A cousin's a relation, surely!" he said Then, as he met Lady R—'s blank stare "And Miss Halstead's your cousin—or, rather, her mother is

He broke off The utter bewildernent on both faces startled him into realization of the fact that once more he had blundered

"Cousin! Impossible!" Lady Rossiner's voice was shrill. Then it dropped. Her eyes grew sudden ly far away, thoughtful, and there was a sudden gleam in them. Her fingers tapped the table nervously Gordon looked across the table and grinned He knew that expression of old

"Just as well to make sure, wouldn't it?" he queried. "She might be worth cultivating if it is —what? Pity!—with a chuckle— I'm not a bit older You might try your hand at matchmaking" He chuckled again, glanced at Kenighi n a shade maliciously, and added after a moment's hesitation, 'Anyway can't see any reason you shouldn't Kemp's always in the running"

CHAPTER XXII.

THAT night, for the first time, Marcia met Michael Trask. Audrey Alden, from their box, caught sight of him in the circle, and beckoned him when the curtain went down on the second act. He put in an appearance a few minutes later, hovering tentatively on the threshold until Audrey turned to greet him and Waldron got up to pull a chair forward for him

Marcia had seen him that first night in the restaurant, with Araby but she had not noticed him Now as Mrs. Alden introduced them, she looked at him with interest

He gave the impression of being a little man. In reality he was of average height, but his shoulders stooped, chiefly from habit. He was an absentminded person, with the soul of a poet that found expression in his wielding of crayons and paint brushes. If the results were not always marketable it was no his fault. As Araby once said, she did not know if his pictures were too good or too bad for the public taste

Trask himself had decided that they were not commonplace enough. He assured her—and any one who would listen to him—that only commonplace things were paying. For himself, he avoided ordinary things like the plague, and aspired only to that which was beautiful

It was a pity from a pecuniary point of view He made just enough money to live on—barely—and dreamed dreams quite happily of a future when he should be great.

In the quite early days of his youth he had married a girl and loved her with a passionate violence which had certainly helped to hasten her untimely death. Since when he had lavished his affection, in a modified but none the less genuine form, upon his daughter

Araby from babyhood had taken his wife's place. She sewed on his buttons, when she thought of it darned his socks, when she had to and chose his meals when they either of them remembered that meals were necessary.

She also gave advice and criticism concerning his pictures, entertained his friends and dreamed dreams with him—sometimes. The two of them were like children Araby sweet and inconsequent, and far too blithely happy-go-lucky to fill her role in any way adequately: Michael Trask, overgrown, indulgent and beat fically content to leave to-morrow to itself and enjoy such good things as might fall to his lot to-day

Michael Trask's hair had grayed early. But Marcia, looking at him as she gave him her hand, was surprised to notice that his eyes were singularly youthful, his cheeks hoisemonly colored and unlined

His glance, dwelling upon her idle, remained fixed. She colored faintly as she saw in it a dawning warmth of admiration He pulled his chair closer to hers and leaned forward. The artist in him appraised the whiteness of her neck and the lines of her black-clad figure against the rose brocade of her cloak. Then he looked more intently at her face again.

"Araby has spoken of you to me," he told her. "She said I would want to paint you as soon as I saw you. I did not believe her. She is very young and she exaggerates sometimes. Besides, as a rule, I do not care to paint women. When they have depth—personality—soul, they lack beauty. You have all these things, Miss Halstead. It would give me immense pleasure if you would sit for me."

He spoke with the simplicity of a boy that sat most oddly upon him. Marcia was momentarily taken aback and Audrey leaned forward

"You mustn't be surprised at anything Michael Trask says or does," she said lightly, "He's not quite like other people. I don't mean that he is mad—only very near it!"

She laughed aloud as the girl gasped, and Trask made a quick gesture of half amused deprecation

"I am in earnest!" he declared Mrs. Alden shrugged Marcia was looking at her attentively and was vaguely surprised at the look in her pretty, dimpled face. It was smiling, but there was an odd little tenderness beneath her amusement: beneath their mockery her merry eyes were unwontedly soft.

"You always are—when you find a new subject. Only it wears off so quickly. If it were not for that you'd be a great man to-day, Michael, in spite of your youth!"

"I'm forty!" Trask retorted, and Marcia gasped audibly. Audrey caught the astonishment in her eyes and laughed again

"You will find Michael a creature of surprises," she declared, quite as if he had not been present. "His faults and failings will not be the least of these. He wastes his ability. He does all his real work at night—when he is asleep. He can express an exquisite subject on canvas with remarkable vividness —if he can do it in a day. Otherwise he fails in dreaming of another 'vision'—and his colors are apt to get mixed. There are occasions when it is almost disastrous! But portraits"—

She spread out her hands. Marcia, amused, interested, glanced sideways at Waldron. He was lounging in the background, watching her. Audrey went on

"Don't succumb to his pleading, Marcia! You'll be sorry if you do He'll pose you for the Madonna one day, and at the next sitting decide that he prefers you as Aphrodite I've seen some of his Madonnas with the eyes of a Paris midinette! Poor Michael! He doesn't mean to do it at all, you know—it's just what he's thinking of at the moment—only it rather takes one's breath away."

"You are unkind!"

Trask spoke with the utmost amiability. He looked at Marcia with a smile—and the smile lighted up his whole face, so that she smiled, too, gaily, merrily, like a girl smiling back at a wholly inconsequent boy. She forgot the incongruity of his gray hair—saw only his eyes, with their irrepressible youth!

Truly, these folks among whom she had come were wonderful! wholly fascinating, utterly unexpected. And all of them seemed to have the joy of life in their hearts. Her own heart stirred, a quick warmth ran through her veins. It was infectious, this gaiety. It swept her back to that girlhood which had never really been hers

She leaned forward "I am perfectly willing to sit for you," she laughed, "if you really want me too Only, I warn you, I am not very patient!"

Trask spread out his hands

"It does not matter," he said, "I seldom am. Thank you very much, I wonder, could you come to-morrow—rather early?"

He was quite in earnest and carefully drew forth a somewhat well thumbed note book to jot down the appointment.

"I shall paint you as 'The Rose Girl,' he said solemnly and Audrey broke in unkindly

"Don't. It reminds one of 'Alexandra' Day, and four pink calico petals stuck on a pin! For goodness sake, think of something really original—for once."

The orchestra was tuning up Waldron moved forward He stooped and lifted Marcia's cloak laid the fur of it across her slim shoulders. In doing so his hand inadvertently touched her bare neck

"Paint her just as she is!" he said. Trask looked at her At Waldron's unintentional touch the color had leaped to her cheeks; her lips were apart, her eyes misty. Trask's own eyes brightened

"I will!" he cried. "And when it is finished I shall call it 'Awakening!'"

"She Is Always the Center of Attraction. What Is the Secret of Her Charm?"

HOW often have you seen women who are able to gain and hold the admiration of everyone—even if their features were not really well formed and proportioned. There is no charm like the beauty of a soft fresh complexion.

Perhaps you have envied women who possess this radiant, velvety complexion. Perhaps you have shrunk from too close scrutiny, because you are keenly conscious that your skin is dull and lifeless, and you have little blemishes that ruin its perfect surface.

Fortunately you need not suffer under this embarrassment, if you are willing to give a little time each night and morning, and follow the treatment given by a famous Fifth Avenue beauty specialist. Many women in the highest circles of New York society have paid well for the simple secret she gives you here for nothing. Here is her famous treatment:

"The whole secret lies in keeping the skin thoroughly clean, and at the same time giving it the food it needs. I always recommend this treatment:

"Each night cleanse your skin by applying soft cloths well moistened in hot water, until the pores are thoroughly opened. Then mix in the palm of the hand a thin paste of Almomeal, with a little warm water. Work this gently into the pores, massaging the face with the finger-tips, rubbing outward and upward. Rinse with hot water to take away all the preparation not absorbed by the skin; then rinse with very cold water to close the pores. Almomeal contains nothing to injure the most delicate skin."

Follow this treatment night and morning for 10 days and you will be surprised and delighted at the change it will bring. Use no soap on your face. You will see a new and soft freshness creep into the complexion that will win the admiration of all.

You can try this treatment for 10 days without expense. Fill out the attached coupon, and mail with 10 cents to cover postage and packing, and the manufacturers of Almomeal will send you a trial package with full directions for 10 days' treatment. Or any reliable dealer in toilet preparations can supply you, if you wish, with a full-sized package for 50 cents. But either way be sure to try this treatment—soon—and realize for yourself its wonderful results.

Love at First Sight

IT rarely happens that two flashes from the eyes of a man and of a woman who meet for the first time should kindle one fire only, says Professor Paolo Mantegazza in "The Book of Love." This is the ideal of the most ardent sympathies, the most fortunate combination in the great, hazardous game of life

To meet suddenly, to see, to admire, to desire each other at once and to embrace with such a look as if it came from above; to feel inundated by a gaze, equally warm and penetrating; to blush together and to feel all at once that two hearts beat louder and mutely make this sweet confession: "I love you, and you are mine!"—all this is a joy too rare, too beautiful, one which few mortals have known and few will know.

It happens more frequently that nascent sympathies proceed unequally, so that the one has already carried a man to the highest summits, while the other hardly begins to stir; the one already throbs, the other only faintly vibrates.

Even when two loves are called to high and fortunate destinies, even when they will soon spread their robust wings together in the space of bliss, a task is reserved to woman in the revelations of love, so different from ours that she cannot feel with us the same sudden and violent emotions

Man says everything with a look; unhesitatingly and proudly he acknowledges his defeats. Woman, even under the spell of the most ardent sympathy, lowers her eyelids, refuses the too intense light and protects her heart with all the refractivities and sedatives at her command

Man has already said to woman a hundred times with the flash of his eyes: "I love you!" The woman, trembling, hardly dares to say: "Perhaps I will love you!"

And away run those two happy beings, fleeing from each other, until the sympathy of the one equals that of the other, until the supreme langour of a long battle is smothered in two notes which vibrate together with the sweetest harmony, while they say to each other, with a sigh, "I love you!" and to Nature repeat with another sigh, "Thanks!"

The June Bride's Silver

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,

The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency.

SILVER and linen—of all their household furnishings these are surely the two things which women love most! And all users certainly the most fitting gift for the June bride. Other presents may be beautiful, but there is something about silver which has a distinction and a sense of lasting value which no gift of china or textiles possesses.

What piece, what pattern shall be selected? That is the question.

The higher our civilization rises the more complicated becomes the array of eating implements. While the uncultured do admirably with a large spoon and their fingers or at best, a coarse knife and fork, it requires a varied and elaborate assortment of table utensils to eat the modern meal in a refined manner. Of course, one must avoid the danger of tendency to have too many "fussy" and almost useless pieces, which only complicate the service and make unnecessary work to keep them clean.

Today good silver is practically within the reach of every home. The manufacturers of plated ware have so developed their product that even at a low cost one is able to find a wide selection of attractive patterns that are guaranteed to give many years of service. Plated ware also removes much of the temptation to theft which the presence of solid silver always involves. Further, the best plated ware has even better wearing qualities than the solid kind, for the metal is not so soft and therefore less likely to become dented.

This does not mean that solid silver is not desirable—only that for the moderate purse and all practical uses sets of plated ware are the best part of time and labor to keep them clean. Nowadays the best taste leans to the plainer patterns with less cutting. The long lines and plain designs, such as the "Colonial" and the "Georgian" and some borrowed from the "Empire" of the French, all have this beautiful simplicity and possess great distinction without elaboration.

Although the typical silver set has twelve pieces, the half-set with eight pieces of each kind, is sufficient for the small family. Indeed it is better to choose six each of more kinds than to have a dozen pieces of only one or two. If the person conducts an informal household, the knife and fork called a "supper" are much better for all meals than the strictly "dinner" knives and forks, which are much longer.

The soup spoon is a piece which in many silver sets is too small and with too short a handle to be convenient for use, particularly by men. Select a model which has a sensible handle—which can be firmly grasped and which is not too much like a toy.

The salad fork is another piece which needs care in selection. It is also often made with a short stumpy handle and somewhat clumsy tines. In selecting a gift one must be careful to notice these details and not buy pieces which are wrong in length or of a poor shape.

The "dessert" spoon is not so widely used here as it is abroad, where all desserts of a pudding nature are eaten with it. It is, however, the most convenient size and shape for soup for children, and for serving if there are no other serving spoons. It is also preferable to the usual teaspoon for tea when so many instances. It is unfortunately not included in many sets, although it has a far wider use than a very large tablespoon.

When we come to the pieces of small silver, like the oyster fork, butter spreader, fruit knife, etc., it is optional whether or not they be included in the chest of silver. It is best to select odd pieces, like a berry ladle, a pie server or a sugar shell, if a gift of only one piece is to be made. If the recipient knows the name of the jeweler it will be an easy matter to purchase for any other article that may be preferred.

Possibly the one most useful single piece of silver that any hostess can own is the pie or cake server, as it is sometimes called. This is a flat, trowel-shaped blade, not very sharp on the edges, but just sufficiently keen to gracefully slice a pie, meat-loaf or other not too solid food. It is excellent for serving gelatine and other desserts.

Sometimes the pie knife is made with one sharp cutting edge and the other edge slightly scooped, so as to hold the food in shape while it is being lifted from one dish to another. It is mounted on a convenient long handle.

Another useful piece is a jelly server, which is like the pie server only smaller. This also has a sharp cutting blade and a raised edge on the other side, which makes it just the thing for lifting a serving of jelly.

In this country it is not considered fashionable to use steel knives with bone handles. But the author speaks strongly in favor of such knives for all dinner use. The usual dinner knife has not a blade sufficiently sharp to cut meat without considerable pressure.

A set of steel dinner knives with bone or horn handles makes an unusual and very practical gift. Fruit knives have new blades, but are also mounted in bone handles.

When we come to the various accessories for tea-table and fancy serving there is a wide selection. There are the bonbon spoons, sugar tongs, salt and peppers and various small baskets and dishes for holding salted nuts, olives etc., all of which come in silver. A complete set, with tray, sugar, cream and pot in silver, rarely costs less than $100 and is a gift most brides will prize. A set of silver candlesticks is another small but welcome gift.

No matter how beautiful a silver pieces may be, don't forget that if placed unsymmetrically or in the wrong order or location the table will not present the attractive and unified appearance which correct adjustment demands

A Message of Unusual Importance to American Women

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches"

AS old, almost, as time itself is this expression, but it is the foundation upon which character, confidence and great businesses have been built. One of these great businesses is VIVAUDOU. And the spirit of this policy is reflected in each of my delightful toiletries.

Recognition and reward have followed. During 1920—discriminating women in America alone, bought 23,700,000 packages of Mavis and other VIVAUDOU preparations to a total value of $9,605,000.

I am aiming to place at least one of our products in the hand of every man, woman and child in America—110,000,000 packages—which will build our business to $38,500,000.

It is due to this enormous volume of business that it has been possible to keep the price of VIVAUDOU products so well within the range of every woman's pocketbook.

Women are forever hearing of new toilet preparations with fanciful names. Now, as never before, should they select only those that have been proven beneficial and not harmful. For even in the case of talcum powder, unless it is made of the best ingredients, perfumed by the purest extracts and prepared by expert chemists, the effects may prove disastrous.

The fact that millions of women throughout the world use MAVIS talcum and the other MAVIS products should be sufficient guarantee of their excellence and purity to those who read this. MAVIS talcum combines the finest imported talc with more of the most exquisite perfumes than are to be found in any other talcum. Of like purity is MAVIS face powder, in each package of which there is decidedly more value and broader guarantee than in any other face powder obtainable.

The secret of youth lies in the daily use of VIVAUDOU complexion powders, so soft and light, of exquisite texture and perfume, but which stay on without artificial means.

MAVIS talc was 25c before the war, 25c during the war and 25c to-day. This is the standard of value recognized by women of taste and refinement, who are all perfectly willing to pay that price for it. Any dealer who is sacrificing his reasonable profit by selling for less than standard VIVAUDOU prices is not helping himself or my company.

So I pledge my faith to you—as I would personally if you were talking to me in my salon. Be careful—select your perfumes and toilet articles by a name that has stood the test of time. VIVAUDOU toiletries are available for every American woman. With each one there is the prestige and quality of a good name.

A subtly dangerous form of unloveliness that no woman can believe herself to have

By one who found that she had let it creep in unaware

"I want to say some things to women—things that no one likes to say, but which they ought, in fairness to themselves, to know.

"They are not easy things to tell. But from a bitter personal experience has come the courage, the knowledge and I hope the tact, to try to make them understand.

"For I, who write this, am a woman and I know.

"A woman may have a crooked nose or a muddy skin—and she'll make the best of it. She can still be so charming that men will fall in love with her.

"The crookedest nose or the muddiest skin will not endanger a woman's attraction for a man as surely as another more subtle form of unloveliness.

"The dangerous part of this unloveliness is that no woman can ever believe herself to have it! It stealthily creeps in when, because she is immaculately clean, she believes herself entirely safe.

"Daintiness, in the little intimate details of person and of dress, is the one quality ascribed to and expected of womankind. And underarm perspiration odor is its greatest enemy.

"This—underarm perspiration—is the danger I wish every woman might realize. It is unloveliness in its most subtle, treacherous form—and so many, many are unwilling, unconscious victims.

"I wish you might use this letter to help them understand the seriousness of this danger. Tell them I only want to save them the humiliation I experienced from innocently offending in this way."

And so we are using this unknown writer's words as she requested—to help women maintain that one quality expected of them above all others—personal daintiness.

Distressing, but true—these things

The physiological condition with which we have to cope in dealing with this subtle, insidious enemy of a woman's daintiness—underarm perspiration odor is peculiarly delicate.

Because the hollow of the underarm and clothing prevent normal evaporation of perspiration here, a disagreeable odor is caused by changing body chemicals. And somehow it is impossible to detect that odor about yourself—while others are aware of it very quickly.

You cannot believe that you offend in this unpleasant way, so fastidious are you in your efforts to be "soap-and-water" clean; so dainty-loving are you in all your habits.

But the fact remains—many women, refined and dainty in all other ways, do fall short of perfect daintiness in this way—undreamed of by themselves.

The one assurance of daintiness

The one way of holding fast to daintiness that more than a million people now use is—with Odorono

As a toilet water originally formulated by a physician for excessive perspiration, Odorono is perfectly harmless; an antiseptic. Physicians and skin specialists frequently prescribe it.

And it is so easy and pleasant to use! Not messy or hard to apply—but just clear, clean liquid.

Odorono is scientifically correct. Years of research by the ablest chemists in the Odorono laboratories have made it as perfect as science can accomplish. If constant testing could have improved it, it would have been done.

The great advantage that Odorono gives is that one application assures at least three days' daintiness. Its regular use twice a week will keep your underarms always dry and dainty.

Apply to underarms at night, allow to dry, then dust with talcum. Bathe with clear water the next morning—or any time, for water cannot affect it.

Protect your lingerie, your frocks and blouses from perspiration stain—without the bother of unsightly dress shields. But more than that, protect yourself from this subtlest form of unloveliness—perspiration odor!

Men also find Odorono indispensable for the toilet. Send for booklet, "The Assurance of Perfect Grooming"

Odorono may be obtained at all toilet counters, 35c, 60c and $1.00, or by mail, postpaid.

Ruth Miller will advise you—without charge

Ruth Miller, specialist in the toilette of the underarm, will gladly advise you if you are troubled in any unusual way with perspiration and will send her new booklet of information on the subject, "The Double Meaning of Daintiness," together with a sample of the Odorono Company's new "After Cream"—with no expense to you. Fill out coupon below and mail today

The Odorono Company's popular new Depilatory

After long experiment and endless testing in the Odorono laboratories, we have achieved another toilet delight for the friends of Odorono—a Depilatory which authorities pronounce a perfect product.

The Odorono Company's Depilatory is the new really pleasant feminine way to remove hair. Gentle and harmless as a toilet cream, dainty and fragrant as a French talc, it bleaches and beautifies the skin, leaving the underarms, neck, forearms and limbs as soft and smooth and clean as the face. It cannot irritate the most sensitive skin and it remains effective until the last bit has been used. An attractive package containing 12 weeks' supply, $1.00.

For 6c in stamps Ruth Miller will send you a sample of the Odorono Company's Depilatory—enough for one thorough underarm application; or for 12c, sample of both Odorono and Depilatory. Fill out and mail the coupon below today. Address Ruth Miller, The Odorono Company, 56 Blair Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio.
